From the General Director

Carmen! What a magically alluring character she is in literature, film, theater, and dance. But it's in opera that she's made her biggest impact, as the center of a work that, for musical freshness, dramatic power, and sheer atmosphere, remains unsurpassed.

The way Lyric – and all other companies producing Georges Bizet's Carmen – can deal with the appeal of this thrilling piece is first to acknowledge that at this point it is perhaps the world's most popular and best-known opera, boasting a larger number of hit tunes than in any other opera. Obviously, we need to present it in a way that captures its dramatic excitement and energy. At the same time, however, we have the challenge of ensuring that our production offers more than a nostalgic journey through our favorite tunes. And that is indeed a formidable challenge for any company! If what we present to our audiences doesn't try to recapture the impact that caused such a scandal – but then such a success – at the first Carmen performances, then we'll be failing in our responsibility to this masterpiece. We want to capture its theatricality, as well as the vividness of the characters and their relationships, while also delivering the “thrill factor” in each and every memorable melody.

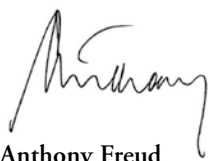

And what melodies they are! Carmen's Habanera and Seguidilla, Don José's Flower Song, Escamillo's Toreador Song, Micaëla's exquisite Act Three aria – we discover all of this music anew and with joy. There is, too, the magic of Bizet's orchestration, which conjures up a dazzling image of sun-drenched Seville. This season at Lyric we're also presenting the work with spoken dialogue, which will greatly enhance the immediacy and dramatic punch of this wonderful opera.

We're delighted to present Carmen in a new production, created by a team headed by Rob Ashford, who has directed both The Barber of Seville (his operatic debut) and Carousel so successfully at Lyric. Those who remember Carousel will realize how perfect Rob is for Carmen, thanks to his very keen choreographic focus and his gifts as a master storyteller.

The performances will be divided between two exceptionally gifted conductors: Harry Bicket, music director of The Santa Fe Opera, now branching out with triumphant success from the pre-1800 repertoire that established him internationally; and Ainārs Rubiķis (Lyric debut), the Latvian conductor who has embarked on a meteoric ascent to stardom since winning the Salzburg Festival Young Conductors Award in 2010.

As usual with the most popular operas when we stage them at Lyric, Carmen will benefit from the performances of two different couples in the central roles – we hope you'll give yourself the pleasure of hearing them both! Carmen's cast of world-renowned stars includes two pairs of protagonists. Anita Rachvelishvili – in an eagerly awaited Lyric debut – will perform opposite Brandon Jovanovich, each reprising roles they have performed all over the world. Ekaterina Gubanova, Lyric's glamorous Foreign Princess in Rusalka, will portray Carmen opposite the hero of last season's Romeo and Juliet, Joseph Calleja, who added Don José to his repertoire last season. Ryan Opera Center alumnus Christian Van Horn portrays Escamillo, after singing Narbal in Les Troyens last fall, and Lyric audiences will meet for the first time an entrancing young Italian soprano, Eleonora Buratto, who will sing Micaëla.

We're delighted that you're here to savor the joys of Carmen with us!

From the Chairman

The 2016-17 season here at Lyric Opera of Chicago is turning out to be one of the most exciting in recent memory. My wife and I have been enjoying every production enormously, and we hope you have, too.

I was particularly excited by the launch of the new Ring cycle with Das Rheingold. It was truly another example of Lyric at its best: a profound, transformative experience based on world-class performances from the cast and orchestra and an engaging and entertaining set design that used every theatrical trick in the book. The fact that we're producing a brand-new expression of the Ring makes me very proud of the artistic choices we make at Lyric, and based on the enthusiastic response from both our audience and from music critics around the world, we have created something very special.

As was true with both Das Rheingold and Lucia, it's likely that the production you're enjoying tonight is benefiting from our ambitious stage-improvement project, the first step of which was implemented over the summer. Three new stage lifts, a turntable, and 16 new point hoists are fundamental to this season's new productions of Das Rheingold, Les Troyens, and The Magic Flute. None of these productions would have been possible were it not for that initial investment. Over the next two years we will see the second phase of the project, including additional stage lifts and point hoists, plus various other crucial capabilities that will ensure our being able to present future productions exactly as our directors have imagined them, and in a safe, efficient manner. We're exceedingly grateful to our Breaking New Ground campaign donors whose generosity has made this possible.

Many of our longtime contributors and subscribers voice a special fondness – even a sense of loyalty – for the seats they've enjoyed at Lyric for years, seats that perhaps their parents enjoyed and passed down to them. In many cases they've memorialized their fondness of those seats by naming them, giving a contribution to Lyric to “claim” that seat, if you will. We have seats throughout the Ardis Krainik Theatre, from the main floor to the boxes and the upper balcony. We hope you'll take advantage of our “Name a Seat” program – it's a wonderful way to leave your own permanent legacy at Lyric.

It's not just our longtime audience members, but also those of the next generation, that we cultivate at Lyric. As we all know, “Millennials” have many more opportunities for entertainment and cultural consumption than ever before. In achieving our goal of continually attracting and engaging younger audiences, we've moved in a big way into media that they're familiar with. Many of you who spend time online, particularly in social media, have noticed in the past year many more banner ads for Lyric productions or mentions and “likes” on Facebook and Twitter, and photos on Instagram. I'm delighted to see social media channels bringing greater awareness of Lyric and its exciting offerings to a whole new audience.

I use Lyric's website on a regular basis, whether to provide background information for an upcoming production or to review the biography of an artist I don't know. It's not unusual for me to snap a picture of a current production poster and post it on my Facebook page! These are some of the ways that I, along with many other fans of Lyric, use media channels to remind us how valuable and exciting the Lyric experience is.

FINELY TUNED CORDS

Members of the acclaimed Lyric Opera Chorus reflect on the joys and challenges of their work

Edited by Magda Krance

It's a mighty force to be reckoned with.

The collective brains, vocal power, and sheer stamina boggle the mind.

Imagine learning and memorizing words and music for multiple operas in multiple languages and musical styles concurrently, then learning and memorizing stage directions – gestures, facial expressions, marching, ambling, running, dancing – plus navigating tricky scenery while singing and acting in character. Whew.

It's a daunting job done brilliantly by the 48 members of Lyric's regular chorus, plus varying numbers of core supplementary chorus and supplementary chorus members, depending on the requirements of each opera being performed. All are passionate and fiercely committed to their art and to this company. Here's what a few of them have to say about what they do.

What is most satisfying about singing operatic repertoire as a chorus member?

SHERRY WATKINS, Soprano, Regular Chorus, 19th season

I love the variety of styles and periods in which we sing. And even if I've done a show before, every production is different. A bonding occurs like no other between colleagues in an opera chorus. We act off of each other, are inspired by one another, and help one another if needed.

JAMES ODOM, Tenor, Regular Chorus, 24th season

I am a storyteller, and the operatic repertoire allows me to be a part of the story. There is always a place in which the individual opera chorister fits as an individual. Like a jigsaw puzzle, it takes all the pieces to give the full picture.

VINCE WALLACE, Bass-baritone, Supplementary Chorus, 8th season

I like learning music and operas that I may never have been able to otherwise. Singing in the chorus has greatly broadened my knowledge of the repertoire.

ROBIN BRADLEY, Mezzo-soprano, Supplementary Chorus, 1st season

The sheer beauty (and mass, in the case of Troyens) of the sound we make together. I've been amazed at the quality of music we produce, and at how lovely it is when all parts come together the way they are meant to.

CARLA JANZEN, Soprano, Core Supplementary Chorus, 6th season
Being able to sing full out, using the technique you've been taught in order to make the most beautiful and powerful music come alive onstage, is an amazing experience.

JEFFREY TAYLOR, Bass, Regular Chorus, 35th season

The chorus in opera has a power and emotional feel that no other ensemble or art form can make. In Italian opera in particular we have a unique sound – our former chorus master, Donald Palumbo, called it a “dark frisson” – that seems to affect you totally when you listen.

KEN DONOVAN, Tenor, Regular Chorus, 24th season

It's a thrill to rehearse and perform with singers that I grew up listening to, such as Plácido Domingo. And there are experiences I will carry with me forever, such as Renée Fleming's Lyric debut in Susannah. I will never forget how almost the entire chorus would stand in the wings every performance to hear Renée's very moving performance of “The Trees on the Mountain.” We knew we were witnessing the beginning of a spectacular career.

LAUREN JANECEK WYSOCKI, Second Soprano, Regular Chorus, 29th season

I get to be onstage with world-class artists, yet sing in the comfort and camaraderie of a group. We are a big, caring, fun, musical family and we have each other's backs.

DOUG WHITE

What are some of your greatest challenges?

VINCE WALLACE

The most challenging aspect for me is finding the line between being an individual while working with others as a large unit.

SHARON GARVEY COHEN, Soprano, Regular Chorus, 29th season

We never have the same day twice. We could meet at 11 one morning or rehearse until 10 p.m. the next night. Our lives are dictated by the rehearsal schedule from August until March, requiring us to be at or near the opera house for up to 12 hours in one day. We work many weekends during the season, of course. Yet sometimes we have a random day off or we need to come to work for only 3 hours in a given day.

RON WATKINS, Baritone, Regular Chorus, 25th season

Memorization can be a challenge, especially early in your career because every production is new to you. Keeping the musical integrity as rehearsals move to the stage is also a challenge. Staging can make a complicated phrase even more difficult. Also challenging is the offstage work required for certain productions. You have to know where to be for your costume changes and props, and these areas may change with each entrance.

ROBIN BRADLEY

One challenge that is somewhat unique to opera ensemble pieces is how strict one must be with every note. It is absolutely necessary to adhere to what's written so the collective sound is clean, precise, beautiful, and expressive.

CARLA JANZEN

The most challenging part is the stamina it takes. I've been in more shows this season than ever before and have learned to pace myself when singing Troyens one day, Quichotte the next, then having Norma, Carmen, and Onegin rehearsals in between. It's a juggling act!

KIMBERLY McCORD, Soprano, Regular Chorus, 10th season

It's all about checking your individuality at the door and serving a common purpose in great detail. That takes patience and dedication. A large part of our many musical rehearsals is devoted to memorizing not only the notes and words but also the "right" vowels, cutoffs, rests, dynamics, and articulation. Accurate muscle memory is crucial because there are countless distractions when we're onstage. We need to be able to react correctly even if something unexpected happens. And it always does!

SHERRY WATKINS

It's a physically demanding job, so it's important to maintain good health, physically and vocally. A show gets cemented in my brain during staging rehearsals. I'm a kinesthetic learner, so it helps to coordinate my movements/actions/motivation with the words and music.

KEN DONOVAN

Operatic chorus members are expected to sing all different types and styles of opera. Some voices sing bigger repertoire better (Verdi, Puccini, Wagner), while others are more suited for Mozart. It's important to know what your voice does well and what it doesn't, and always be mindful of your vocal technique. Choristers need to be constantly aware of how they fit into the fabric of the sound.

How do you prepare for operas you've sung before, or are singing for the first time?

LAUREN JANECEK WYSOCKI

It's like riding a bike...you just get right back to it. There's some portion of the brain that has it stored.

CARLA JANZEN

One. Step. At. A. Time. Looking at the whole season, it's easy to get overwhelmed; I break it down as much as possible. We had a lot of rehearsals for Les Troyens, since it was new for everyone and had so much music. For the other pieces that the regular chorus has done relatively recently, I have to learn it quickly.

SHERRY WATKINS

We've done it before, but Eugene Onegin is more difficult because we don't sing in

This season's Les Troyens, a tremendous challenge for the chorus, pictured here as the long-besieged people of Troy; and Cathleen Dunn and Sherry Watkins as two Trojan women backstage.

Russian as often. Les Troyens was a different animal because it's so massive! I had to take it section by section. Even when we began performances, I had to review some things in my brain before going onstage.

JAMES ODOM

I look for the mistakes I've learned. No matter how many times I do a piece, there are sections I need to review and fix. You don't really learn a piece until at least the third time you've done it. And even after the tenth, you'll still find things you've missed before.

CORRINE WALLACE-CRANE, Alto, Regular Chorus, first season, previously three seasons each in Supplementary and Core Supplementary Chorus

Memorizing can usually be done in our extensive rehearsals with lots of repetition. For shows with enormous amounts of music, I make a playlist of the tough numbers on my iPhone. I listen on the train, in the car, at the gym, wherever I can. For a show that's new to me but not most others (i.e. Lucia or Flute), I look at the score in my free time. If needed, I'll write words on notecards that I'll carry around until I'm solid.

SHARON GARVEY COHEN

This season brings my second Don Quichotte, my third Eugene Onegin, and my fifth Carmen. After 20 years I barely had to open the Quichotte score! With Les Troyens, for the first time, we were given scores ahead of time. Many of us studied the score last summer, and listened to or watched it, just to get it in our heads.

KEN DONOVAN

When fine-tuning the sound and precision of the score, you get to know the music on an almost cellular level and it sticks with you for many years. Each chorus master has specific ideas about the sound or articulation of a chorus; it's important to be flexible and adjust accordingly. Likewise, each conductor has a personal interpretation of a score and we need to incorporate that as well, often with very little music rehearsal. With Les Troyens, we started from scratch. I spent several days writing in the translation and highlighting my part, which made the initial music rehearsals more manageable.

KIMBERLY McCORD

It's difficult to prepare outside of rehearsal because unlike soloists, everything we do must be done together. Drilling as a group is vital. However, there have been a few shows for which I had to work on memorization outside of Lyric. I try to sing along to recordings while completing housework. If I can sing correctly while distracted, I know it's there.

What should debuting conductors, directors, and singers know about the Lyric Opera Chorus?

RON WATKINS

We take our work very seriously and are continually striving to honor the reputation we have as the Lyric Opera of Chicago Chorus!

SHARON GARVEY COHEN

We are all pros, we take pride in our work, and we will do what we can to accommodate you in music and staging. We are a chatty and friendly bunch, and we love a good party.

JAMES ODOM

We've got your back. We can and will do whatever you need or want, just ask us.

ROBIN BRADLEY

We're a very well-oiled machine, and we work tirelessly on the precision and beauty of each piece we sing. I also relish the opportunity to really contribute to every scene. My favorite scene in Les Troyens was the women's Act Two finale with Cassandra. We interacted a great deal with Christine Goerke, requiring an immense amount of emotional commitment to genuinely portray what the scene required.

JEFFREY TAYLOR

I appreciate when a conductor takes time to work with us specifically, in the rehearsal room, so we learn whether the conductor wants different tempi, phrasing, dynamics, or cutoffs than what we practiced. A few conductors have made us feel like full partners in the production.

The men proclaim their devotion to Hanna (Renée Fleming) in The Merry Widow (2015-16); and the women admire Nemorino (Giuseppe Filianoti) in L'elisir d'amore (2009-10).

CARLA JANZEN

The voices in our group are pretty incredible. Any of the singers in the Lyric Chorus could have had solo careers, and many did, but we've chosen to be choristers because it's the right path for us.

LAUREEN JANECZEK WYSOCKI

We truly are among the best at what we do and we take great pride in that.

KIMBERLY McCORD

We get excited when conductors actively engage with us to perfect our contribution to the production.

SHERRY WATKINS

I love when principal artists interact with us directly, look us in the eye, and engage with us personally. Directors should know we're a pretty good dancing chorus, in general, and we shine when we're given specific and individual attention, vs. being addressed as a group. I'm amazed at the focus and acting abilities of my colleagues, especially in shows that demand more of us emotionally, such as Bel Canto and The Passenger.

KEN DONOVAN

We are very much like a family. I've made some of my closest friends here, friendships that will last a lifetime. We're proud of our rich history and reputation for great opera-making, and are always striving to be better. It's exciting to work with new conductors, directors, and singers, and see them return after successful collaborations. Many of us are extremely passionate about our work at Lyric and it's a huge part of how we identify ourselves.

What should the audience know about who you are and what you contribute to their experience?

CARLA JANZEN

Our audience is the inspiration for everything we do. Attention is paid to even the most mundane details to create a meaningful experience for them. When we feel the audience give energy back to us, it creates a feedback loop magnifying the experience for everyone, onstage and off. That's the magic of live theater and why we all pursue it!

SHERRY WATKINS

The energy of the chorus heightens the excitement of a show and amplifies the emotion of a scene. When we're all engaged in the action, it's a powerful experience for those onstage as well as in the audience and we feed off each others' energy.

JAMES ODOM

Our goal is to give the audience moments of sublime elation, great catharsis, subtle humor, and great belly laughs. To have them share in the sublime.

VINCE WALLACE

We're regular people just like them. The only difference is our jobs are playing pretend. It's a job like any other; we have similar issues to deal with but the product is entertainment.

SHARON GARVEY COHEN

We're all educated professionals who trained as soloists and found our niche in this professional chorus. The competition for this job is very high. We love performing for you whether we are background "instruments" as in Lucia or Traviata, or are a main "character" as in Peter Grimes or Turandot. Many of us perform as soloists in smaller opera companies and professional church choirs. I love to introduce new choristers to the opera house. Someone did this for me my first year and I try to repeat the tradition. The look on a new chorister's face walking out onto that stage for the first time is priceless! I love my job.

CARMEN Synopsis

ACT ONE

In a town square in Seville, Spain, soldiers guarding the cigarette factory idly watch the passersby. Micaëla, a young country girl, enters the square in search of one of the soldiers, Don José. Led by an officer, Moralès, the soldiers surround her and try to detain her, but Micaëla flees.

Afterwards, José's military unit arrives. At noon, the young men of the town gather to watch the women as they come out of the cigarette factory on a break from work. One of the women, the gypsy Carmen, tells her friends that love is "a wild bird that cannot be imprisoned." Before returning to work, she flirtatiously tosses a flower at Don José. Micaëla returns, this time with a letter from José's mother. José resolves to honor his mother's wishes by marrying Micaëla.

Suddenly, screams are heard from the factory: Carmen has been involved in a fight and has slashed another woman's face. While Lieutenant Zuniga drafts the order for her imprisonment, she is put into José's custody. Carmen persuades him to let her escape by promising a future rendezvous.

ACT TWO

At Lillas Pastia's inn, Carmen and two friends, Frasquita and Mercédès, sing of the gypsy life. Lieutenant Zuniga tells Carmen that José was thrown in prison for allowing her to escape, but that he has just been released. The bullfighter Escamillo arrives with his entourage and asks Carmen if she will ever love him. Dancaïre and Remendado, two revolutionaries, try to convince Carmen and her friends to accompany them on their next mission, but Carmen refuses, saying she is in love with José and is awaiting his return.

When José arrives, Carmen sings and dances for him, but a distant bugle sounds and he says he must return to the barracks immediately. She invites him to desert the army and join the revolutionaries, but he refuses, and Carmen mocks his cowardice. As he is leaving, José encounters Zuniga, who has come in hopes of seeing Carmen. The jealous José strikes his superior officer. Now an outlaw, he has no choice but to desert the army and join Carmen and her friends.

ACT THREE

The revolutionaries are busy moving their shipment of rifles through the dangerous hillside. Carmen, now tired of José's jealousy, reads her fortune in the playing cards. She draws the death card.

When the revolutionaries head down the mountain to bribe the customs officer, José is left as a lookout. On her way up the mountain to find José, Micaëla hears a rifle shot and takes cover. José has fired a warning shot at Escamillo, who has come in search of Carmen. Escamillo tells José he is in love with Carmen and they start to fight but are separated by the returning gang. Remendado then discovers Micaëla, who has come to beg José to return home to his dying mother. Carmen urges him to leave; José is convinced she wants to be rid of him in order to take up with Escamillo. José leaves with Micaëla, warning Carmen that he will come back.

ACT FOUR

An excited crowd gathers for the bullfight. Outside the ring, Frasquita and Mercédès pull Carmen aside and tell her to be careful because José has been seen in the crowd. Carmen, however, ignores their warnings and bravely remains for a final encounter. José pleads desperately with her to come back to him. As she tells him she can never love him again, the crowd is heard cheering Escamillo's victory in the ring. Realizing that he can never possess Carmen, José stabs her to death.

Novel Nomads: How a Fascination with Gypsies Led to Opera's Most Provocative Heroine

By Harry Rose

DAN RIST

Two celebrated *Carmen*s, a century apart: French soprano Emma Calvé and American mezzo-soprano Denyce Graves, the latter pictured at Lyric in 2005.

In Carmen Georges Bizet vividly depicted sun-soaked Andalusia and its transient, adventurous gypsy inhabitants, yet the composer created this work without ever setting foot in Spain. It seems like a paradox that Bizet produced such an adroit study of a regional culture and how certain personalities worked within its confines without even coming into contact with that culture! On another level, though, Carmen is just a result of an artistic fascination with Spain, “exotic” gypsies, and nomadic adventure that permeated contemporary Western Europe.

Yet what makes Bizet’s opera extraordinary is not that it was able to put “authentic” Spanish flair onstage at Paris’s Opéra Comique, but that it took a superficial cultural fascination embodied in Prosper Mérimée’s 1845 novella of the same name, highlighted its best moments, and drew realistic, multi-dimensional characters out of it. Although audiences didn’t immediately appreciate how Bizet brought Carmen herself to life, the opera’s initial shock value and the well-defined female protagonists of the operatic stage who would follow Carmen demonstrate good art’s intrinsic ability to provoke and stimulate change.

Bizet’s chief source material was the novella of Mérimée, the celebrated French author and historian. It appeared in the Revue des Deux Mondes in October 1845, with a fourth chapter added in 1846. Mérimée probably first heard the Carmen story from the Countess of Montijo (mother of Eugénie, the future empress of France) while on his visit to Spain in 1830, but he significantly embellished it when he finally put pen to paper. This 1830 visit, Mérimée’s first to the Iberian peninsula, included a venture into the south where he studied the gypsies of Granada. Though the culture fascinated him and served him well when he wrote Carmen, Mérimée’s interest in the gypsies lay temporarily dormant.

What apparently reawakened his interest was the continuing publication of the writings of George Borrow, an English author and contemporary of Mérimée who studied the Spanish gypsies intensely. Mérimée himself was familiar with Borrow’s first published book, Le Zinçali: An Account of the Gypsies of Spain (1841), a comprehensive guide to the language, culture, and customs of the gypsies of southern Spain. These peers didn’t share an especially positive rapport, though. Indeed, Mérimée even cites Borrow in his fourth chapter of Carmen with the exclusive purpose of refuting one of his claims concerning the inherent chastity of the gypsy women. Nevertheless, Borrow's writings confirmed and reawakened Mérimée's own memories.

The fact that Mérimée's novella is the result of so much similar academic study comes as no surprise. Mérimée was a scholar and an administrator at heart who made his name in France not only as an author, but also as his country's inspector-general of historical monuments. It was through this work that he applied his expertise in architecture, the arts, and history towards protecting the architectural patrimony of France. Mérimée always had a certain discomfort with fictional writing, and that prompted him to often include extraneous, distracting third-person narrators and noms de plume in his attempts to curtail criticism by his peers, maintain anonymity, and denigrate fictional writing, a genre that, in his view, was built on banalities and falsities. This unevenness of intent produced his Carmen – was it conceived as a freestanding work of fiction, or a long-ruminated-upon academic treatise about the gypsies? The answer is both.

The story Mérimée follows is more or less maintained in Bizet's opera, but the radical differences come in narrative structure. The first half of the novella is told by Mérimée himself, reflecting on his fictitious encounter with a man whom he later learns is "José Navarro, the most notorious bandit in Andalusia." Mérimée and Don José then encounter Carmen in Seville, though she and Don José appear to have had a past. Flash forward to the days preceding Don José's execution for an as-yet-unrevealed crime, when the narrative voice switches from Mérimée himself to José, who recounts the story of his involvement with Carmen. Here, Carmen is realized in her fullest detail, justly becomes the novella's best-defined character, and emerges as an archetype for the Gypsies. Much like the Carmen of Bizet's opera, she's uniquely beautiful, resourceful, feisty, resolute, and intelligent, despite having no formal education.

From the third chapter on, the opera and the novella follow similar plots. Carmen is still an independent bohémienne who cannot be tamed; Mérimée even ascribes animal-like characteristics to her, comparing her swaying hips to "some filly out of the Córdoba stud." She still manages to land herself in prison after an altercation in the cigarette factory, but seduces Don José into letting her escape. When José is taken to jail himself, Carmen helps him break out and he joins her and her band of smugglers. José then marries Carmen, but before long she tires of him. All the while, Carmen has continued to attract the attention of various wealthy sponsors, including the picador Lucas, the character who plays a small part in Mérimée's story and is developed into the toreador Escamillo in Bizet's opera. After she leaves José for Lucas, the story reaches its violent culmination in a confrontation in which the jilted, unhinged José stabs Carmen, buries her, and surrenders to the police – the crime for which he is being executed at the end of Chapter Two.

Almost taking precedence over the events and characters, gypsy culture is interspersed throughout the novella. Peppered with gypsy sayings, folk songs, and cultural asides, Carmen seems a paean to an exotic culture contrasting with contemporary France. In fact, the novella's oft-maligned final chapter is entirely a description of gypsy ways, attitudes, and language culled from Mérimée's research. But here Mérimée's story loses gravitas; this later-date addition of the fourth chapter is a complete departure from the plot line or characters – not once in the chapter is Carmen herself even mentioned! A compelling resolution to the novella is lost to Mérimée's preoccupation with history. Fortunately, though, this left Bizet and his team with a strong skeleton upon which to build their opera.

"Mérimée's 'Carmen'? Is she not killed by her lover? And that background of thieves, gypsies, cigar-makers? At the Opéra Comique, a family theatre!...You will frighten off our audience. It is impossible," exclaimed Camille du Locle, director of the Opéra Comique, when Carmen librettist Ludovic Halévy brought forward the joint project he was preparing with his co-librettist, Henri Meilhac, and Bizet. Programming Carmen represented a significant shift for the Opéra Comique. For one thing, a murder had never been seen on its stage. The Opéra Comique thrived presenting wholly French works to a bourgeois family audience. Stories with a moral, enhanced by light, pleasant music, were the norm. The Opéra also structured all the works it commissioned similarly, which, with spoken dialogue in between set-pieces of music, almost resembles modern musical theater structure more than it does traditional opera. Later revisions to Carmen included sung recitative in the place of dialogue, but Lyric audiences will see the Opéra Comique version that Bizet and his librettists devised.

Bearing all this in mind, the creative team for Carmen made some concessions. The characters of Micaëla, Don José's virginal fiancée, and Frasquita and Mercédès, Carmen's lively friends, were added. The librettists even considered turning the smugglers, Dancaïre and Remendado, into something approaching comic figures. But as the opera's evolution progressed towards opening night, Bizet became increasingly resolute about certain unconventional details – he considered the onstage murder absolutely indispensable to the plot and the no-holds-barred acting of the first Carmen, Célestine Galli-Marié, adequately ferocious. Additionally, he insisted that the chorus, which previously performed fixed on the sides of the stage, move and act. The sensationalized media coverage, plus the unapologetic onstage depiction of a social class the elites saw as dirty and lesser, contributed to one of the biggest opening-night fiascos in operatic history.

The initial acts were positively received, but the audience became increasingly hostile. "They did not seem to want to enjoy themselves," remarked the singer Barnolt, who sang Remendado. By the end, there were only a handful of people left in the house when the singers took their bows, and most of the audience had dismissed the work entirely. However, it wasn't so much Carmen's outward sexuality or immoral deeds that offended operagoers; it was that the work represented a step forward in entertainment at the time – a step away from the customs that distinguished French opera from what was happening contemporaneously in Italy (Verdi's Aida and Simon Boccanegra) and Germany (Wagner's Ring cycle and Parsifal). In those countries, the medium was arguably growing in a faster, more innovative way towards Italy's verismo and Wagner's Gesamtkunstwerk. Maybe Giacomo Puccini framed it best when he contrasted his Manon Lescaut (1893) with the quintessential opéra comique, Manon (1884), by Bizet's contemporary Jules Massenet: "Massenet feels it as a Frenchman, with powder and minuets. I shall feel it as an Italian, with a desperate passion." Carmen embodied that transition.

If anything, Bizet's Carmen is a softer, more sentimental creation than Mérimée's

MTV’s contemporary take on the story, Carmen: A Hip Hopera (2001), starred Beyoncé in her film acting debut.

animal-like temptress. An example of this comes in the opera’s famed Act Three, in which Carmen, reading cards, foresees death for herself and for José:

If in the book of fate your happiness is written,
then deal and have no fear,
for every card you turn,
to look into your future,
will show good fortune there.
But if you are to die,
the terrifying sentence is written there on high [...]
the cards will show no mercy – they still repeat: Death!

When Carmen comes to this realization, beneath her the violins start a plodding, dreadful rhythm that they maintain for several measures. Additionally, the orchestration of Carmen’s premonition of death, with its repetitive motions in the violins and crescendo in the trombones, evokes the Fate theme – a leitmotif in the Wagnerian vein – that is first quoted in the overture. The consistency of the underlying orchestral gestures reveals a hidden turmoil inside Carmen, something deep and persistent. This underlying distress communicated through Bizet’s music finds no equivalent in Mérimée’s Carmen who, in her final confrontation with José, asserts, “You want to kill me, I can see that, it is fated, but you shall not make me submit.” Mérimée’s Carmen has a tough interior and exterior, even in dire moments. It’s what builds her characterization as a femme fatale, but Bizet’s interpretation gives Carmen more complexity. This is just one example of how Bizet leveraged an aspect of Mérimée’s novella, the theme of fate, and incorporated it into his opera.

While the novella expounds a steely seductress, the opera’s heroine is more enigmatic and three-dimensional. It was Carmen who broke the mold and paved the way for other psychologically layered operatic heroines in the near future and beyond. Massenet’s Thaïs (1881), the story of a decadent Egyptian prostitute transformed by her encounter with a monk, comes to mind, as do the title characters in Strauss’s Salome and Berg’s Lulu as equally complex heroines with powerful sexual stigmas attached to each of them.

Though on its own, Mérimée’s historically grounded novella hasn’t equaled the success of Bizet’s passionate opera, it’s only because Bizet’s work is an extraordinary piece of music drama. Bizet transformed an uneven pre-existing source and imbued it with an augmented dramatic intensity and an enchanting, evocative melodic freshness. Carmen has endured as the consummate operatic masterpiece because its drama is as memorable as its music.

A Talk with the Director

Rob Ashford, director and choreographer of this season's Carmen, spoke with Lyric's dramaturg, Roger Pines.

What most excited you when the opportunity to direct Carmen was presented to you?

I know the music so well (it was one of the first operas I ever listened to). For some reason, it's become a part of the soundtrack of many people's lives. I love the element of dance in it as well, and how important that is in the piece. Carmen dances as a seduction and as a release. It's rare in opera that dance is central to a leading character. Having started out as a choreographer, I'm excited by that.

Can we talk about the updating of the opera?

We moved it to 1936-37, during the Spanish Civil War. One of my first fascinations when approached about Carmen was the bullfighting element in it. The most symbolic bull I could recall was in Picasso's "Guernica," created as a reaction to the German bombing of a small town during the war. There's a wonderful image in the upper left-hand corner of a figure holding a dead child or young woman in his arms, in total grief and despair, and overlooking all of that is this bull, just staring down at it. It reminded me of the end of the opera, with Carmen in the arms of Don José, with him in such pain and so tortured, and the idea of this bull and the victorious Escamillo lurking above that whole scene. I couldn't get that image from "Guernica" out of my mind.

I went to Madrid to see the painting, and it became a jumping-off point for the production. There was also the idea of making the smugglers revolutionaries in Act Three, with a cause they were fighting for. That war was often described as Fascism vs. Democracy – so it seemed a good parallel for the opera.

At Lyric we have two different Carmens bringing their own strengths to the role, but what kind of characterization are you most interested in seeing them create onstage?

I'm hoping both ladies will see her psychological and emotional journey from the inside. She's powerless within society, yet completely empowered by men's reactions to her. She works in a cigarette factory, so she's quite low in social standing. It's an interesting dance she does between devotion and freedom, between the possibility of true love and striving for status – this is all fascinating to present onstage.

What's most intriguing to you about the Don José/Carmen relationship?

I think it's intriguing because he's a "good boy" who does what his mother and society want him to do. Even his profession as a soldier is to protect and do good, but he's fighting something inside himself. There is a transference of his lust for Carmen to his love for Carmen. He leaves Micaëla, the good girl, and goes for the baddest girl possible, and does it with the same conviction that he courted Micaëla! We have to examine exactly how that conflict inside him drives him to do what he does.

You're both director and choreographer. This opera gives you crucial dance sequences that open Act Two and Act Four. What style of movement should the audience expect?

There is a lot of partnering in this show, and that's intentional, because of the intense relationship between Don José and Carmen. They seem to dance around each other through the entire opera, and I thought we should mirror that in the couples dancing onstage.

In Houston you used the recitatives, but Lyric's production will use the spoken dialogue. How was the decision made to go in that direction?

Anthony Freud felt strongly about using the spoken dialogue, and [Houston Grand Opera artistic director] Patrick Summers felt equally as strongly about the recitatives. I see the advantages to both. How great that we get to try it a different way, to see what that does to the story – that's exciting to me.

Carmen: After the Curtain Falls

When the performance is over, try discussing it with your companions and any other opera lovers you know! You can continue your pleasure in Carmen for hours – even days – by exchanging ideas about it. Here are some topics we can suggest:

DAN REST

Katharine Goeldner and Yonghoon Lee in the final scene of Carmen, 2010-11 season.

- Bizet's Carmen tells a dramatic and realistic story about life in Seville in the 1820s (updated by a century in Lyric's production). How is the opera's realism similar to and different from that in other operas you might have seen?
- Discuss the role of fate in Carmen. Do you think the story could have ended any other way?
- Compare the central female characters of Carmen and Micaëla, and also the central male characters of Don José and Escamillo. How does the music Bizet has written for these characters, respectively, showcase their distinct attributes?
- How does Bizet's music evoke the landscape and culture of Spain? What other elements of the production – set, costumes, choreography – transported you?
- Why do you think the opera's early audiences were scandalized, even outraged, by Carmen? Does opera still have the power to shock us today?
- Perhaps no other French opera has achieved the same popular status as Carmen. What elements do you think make this opera such an enduring classic?

To continue enjoying Carmen, Lyric dramaturg Roger Pines suggests the following performances:

BACKSTAGE LIFE: John W. Coleman

What is your role here at Lyric, and how long have you held the position?

My role is stage manager and this is my 27th season. I essentially act as project manager for a show, helping to create an environment where people can do their best work. I meet with the director and the creative teams and determine their needs for the production and how I can best accomplish their vision during their time here at Lyric. I work with a show from its initial technical process, through the opening performance, and throughout its run on the stage.

What led you to work at Lyric?

I'm from the Chicago area and I'd done a lot of freelance work around the country in stage management. I love the "City of Big Shoulders"; Chicago is vibrant and amazing, and no matter where I go, it's always been home. Lyric was and continues to be an incredible company doing some truly groundbreaking work. The musical standards here are unmatched and I knew I wanted to be a part of it.

What's a typical day like for you?

We arrive well before the day's rehearsals begin. Our team follows up on any notes from the day before with the technical department and crews, checks the rehearsal space to make sure it's ready for rehearsal or performance, and double-checks scheduling with the rehearsal department. Once rehearsals begin in the morning, we take attendance, keep track of notes for the various departments, track all staging, coordinate scene shifts with stage hands, cue entrances, act as timekeepers, and make sure the information is communicated in a timely manner. At the end of the day, we produce written notes and reports from the rehearsals and performances. During performances and onstage rehearsals, we're responsible for calling the technical and lighting cues and ensuring everything is running smoothly with the production.

What's the most challenging aspect of your job?

Each show brings its own unique set of challenges, but I try to view them as opportunities for success. A production might be technologically difficult to pull off, or it might be an opera that has highly complex musical elements. Fortunately, we have tremendous resources here and amazingly talented people on staff whose breadth of experience and sincere desire to produce high quality work is what gets us through the challenging times.

What keeps you committed to the work you do?

Being a part of a production that is musically, dramatically, and artistically spectacular is fantastic. The work is exciting, there's always a new challenge, and you're only as good as your last show. We're all here because we think the work is important, and we love to create these works for the public and share the experience with them.

What's something about your job that people might not know?

That stage managers spend more time with the creative team and artists in a production than just about anyone else in the company. We're at every rehearsal and performance, and really learn the ins and outs of every show.

Favorite Lyric moment?

I came home after a challenging day of rehearsals during the 1993 season and I had a message on my answering machine from Ardis Krainik (Lyric's general director from 1982 to 1997). The first thing I heard was, "Hello dearie! This is Ardis – surprise!" She was very kind and said she knew it had been a rough day and how much she appreciated my hard work. It was incredible and a moment I'll never forget.

Beyond opera, what are your other passions?

I love going to the other cultural institutions around the city like theaters, the symphony, and the Art Institute. I enjoy traveling, but I also love being at home and relaxing with family. When I have vacation time towards the end of the season, something small like pulling weeds in my garden and spending time outside is really fulfilling.

BMO Harris Bank: Alexandra Dousmanis-Curtis

“When I was five years old, I had to beg my father to let me take piano lessons. I had just returned from seeing A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum in New York City with my mom, and I had decided that I wanted to be a musician. It was such a thrilling night. I’ll never forget the feeling of it, getting all dressed up, and the excitement of falling in love with music and performing. My father was not for it at first, but I eventually won the argument.”

Alex Dousmanis-Curtis is Group Head for U.S. Retail and Business Banking for BMO Harris Bank, the eighth-largest bank in North America. Alex is responsible for driving strategy, customer loyalty and customer relationships, and is honored to represent the bank’s longstanding partnership with Lyric by serving on Lyric’s Board of Directors and Investment Committee. “Being involved at Lyric keeps me personally connected with a lifelong passion: the music itself. I studied piano and oboe all through grade school, and I planned to become a concert pianist. In the end, life got in the way and I ended up in banking, which I also love, but I’ve always thought that when I retire I might like to take up the oboe again.”

After studying voice at Westminster Choir College, Alex’s professional career began at BMO Harris Bank, and aside from a jaunt to a competing bank in Canada, she’s been with the company ever since. “I ended up marrying a Canadian, so I’ve lived in Toronto my entire adult life. Even though my family stayed in Toronto after I was transferred here two years ago, Chicago is starting to feel like home now too. Lyric has been a big part of that for me. Not only has it allowed me to reconnect with music, but the people are fantastic. When you’re in a new city, it’s very helpful to have people who welcome you. Additionally, my banking background allows me to approach my time on the Investment Committee with an energy that is purposeful. I work to help keep Lyric strong, and I find real satisfaction in the professional dimension of my board service.”

Alex Dousmanis-Curtis and Dave Curtis with Lyric’s general director, Anthony Freud

Alex’s involvement hasn’t only benefited her and Lyric – her husband Dave has caught the opera bug as well. “My husband knew nothing about opera. He never went with me in Canada; I would go with my girlfriends. But for opening night of The Marriage of Figaro last year, he got hold of the libretto and a few recordings, and learned every part. I’m not kidding, he was singing along to the music when I came home one night, and I thought, I can’t believe this has happened, I am so happy! He did the same thing with Das Rheingold. We were in the car with our guests on the way to the Opening Night Gala, and he was explaining the plot, when Wotan arrives, what this theme means, and so on. That has been my favorite side benefit of being involved with Lyric, that opera has a new fan.”

BMO Harris Bank’s tremendous support – and that of its predecessors – has spanned five decades, most recently as exclusive sponsor of Lyric’s annual star-studded, one-night-only concerts. Lang Lang, Renée Fleming, Susan Graham, and Ana María Martínez are among the featured soloists whose Lyric appearances have been made possible by BMO Harris Bank’s sponsorship, and the bank is the exclusive sponsor of Plácido Domingo’s triumphant return this season for the second year in a row. “These concerts are really special for our clients. They love the ‘rock star’ moment of getting to spend time with big-name stars like Plácido. Sponsoring these concerts gives us an opportunity to thank them in a meaningful way.”

Alex also believes that star power is what keeps Lyric relevant to a broader audience. “When people who might not normally be interested in opera recognize Plácido’s name, it may increase their perception of Lyric. I think that’s another reason why BMO likes the celebrity concerts. It creates a buzz that is contagious, and makes us feel proud that Lyric is admired as well by that kind of world-class talent.”

BMO Harris Bank delivers services across 600 branches in eight states, and has almost 14,300 employees. One of BMO’s core values is giving back to the communities in which it operates. To that end, Alex appreciates the diverse audiences Lyric is able to reach through a variety of programs, ranging in scope from newly-commissioned operas for children like Jason and the Argonauts to Lyric’s Backstage Tours. “Diversity is important to us as a bank, and Lyric brings all kinds of people together. Looking around in the audience, you see people you may have never been able to meet before. Innovative programming can touch children of all backgrounds and make them consider learning more about opera. Giving a peek behind the curtain demystifies the art form and invites participation. The key is exposure, and opera is the gift of a lifetime.”

“BMO is coming up on a milestone in 2017 as we celebrate our bicentennial as a company. Two hundred years is a long time. We have learned a lot about who we are and what we stand for. Supporting the arts is part of our community commitment, and the BMO Harris Bank partnership with Lyric is an exciting example. We’re all stronger together, and we are thrilled to have Lyric by our side.”

The Royal Opera

Le Grand Théâtre de Genève

Lyric Opera of Chicago

The age and state of Lyric's stage infrastructure and equipment make it incompatible with other great opera companies with whom we wish to collaborate. Lyric's last stage improvements, which happened almost 25 years ago, were only interim fixes. We must invest in proper projection equipment, stage lifts, point hoist motors and a fully-automated counterweight flying system, all to the tune of $16 million. You can help make this happen with a donation of any size. A few dollars to a few thousand will add up to ensuring our ability to create and coproduce innovative productions for Chicago audiences for years to come.

Lyric Opera is very grateful to the thousands of donors who give gifts of less than $500 to our annual campaign. Due to space limitations, we are unable to list the names of these donors, but their generosity is sincerely appreciated.

Facilities and Services

Welcome!

Lyric Opera of Chicago welcomes you to this performance. We are very glad you are here. In order to ensure maximum enjoyment for all guests during a performance, we ask for your compliance with some simple house rules:

- Please remain silent during the performance.
- As a gesture of respect for other audience members and the performing artists, please remain seated until an act or the opera is completely over. If you need to leave the auditorium, you may not be readmitted while the performance is in progress. The usher staff will help you understand when you can be reseated.
- Do note that the program and artists are subject to change without notice.
- Please silence all electronic devices and double check that phones, pagers, watches, and other personal devices are switched off before the performance begins.
- Please don't use any device with a glowing screen at any time during a performance. It is always more disruptive and distracting than you think it is.
- Noises from the lobby may disturb patrons in the auditorium during a performance.

Your understanding and cooperation are appreciated. Please let any member of Lyric's house staff know if you have any questions.

Tickets:

Buy tickets online any time via Lyric's website:

www.lyricopera.org

Pre-opera talks:

All ticketed guests are invited to attend a free pre-performance talk in the auditorium, beginning one hour before curtain time and lasting for 30 minutes. This is a great opportunity to learn more about the performance you are about to experience. Doors open for the pre-opera talks 75 minutes before the performance begins. You can feel free to choose your seat for the talk. The auditorium will be cleared after the pre-opera talk concludes.

If you arrive late:

Lyric has a tradition of starting performances right on time, and the doors to the house are closed promptly at curtain time. We realize situations arise that can delay your arrival, and we will try to accommodate latecomers in an available section of the house or at a predetermined break, which may be intermission. A video screen is available in the lobby, so you won't miss a moment of the performance. Please be aware that patrons who must leave their seats during a performance will not be readmitted until intermission or a suitable break.

Attention, Box Seat Holders:

Lyric encourages guests in box seats to share the front-of-box seating by switching seats within your box at an appropriate time during an intermission. You can make this plan, prior to the performance, if you know the others in your box. Please remember that you may need to adjust your seating plans to include patrons who do not regularly sit in your box and would be unaware of any previous seating arrangements.

Please Note:

The use of a ticket acknowledges that you have granted permission to appear in photographs, video capture, and capture by other media, in all of the public spaces in the house and theater to be used by Lyric for any promotional purpose. This blanket permission releases Lyric Opera of Chicago from liability resulting from the use of such images in any medium.

First Aid:

In case of illness or injury, please inform an usher, who will call the house manager and house EMT for assistance.
