Lyric

From the General Director

I have been a devoted admirer of the bel canto repertoire for all of my operagoing life. In introducing the two bel canto operas on Lyric's schedule this season, an anecdote comes to mind.

When I was in my early teens, in Harrod's record department in London, I was wandering around and was suddenly transfixed by an amazing voice. I knew I'd never heard anything like this. It was Dame Joan Sutherland singing the heroine's aria from Rossini's Semiramide. That performance led me to investigate all the great works of the bel canto repertoire, which remains to this day one of my greatest enthusiasms in opera.

For that reason, it is a particularly great pleasure for me that Lyric is presenting Donizetti's Lucia di Lammermoor and Bellini's Norma this season (coincidentally, two works closely associated with Dame Joan, who had so much to do with shaping my love of bel canto singing). These are arguably the greatest operas of both of these composers, each a supreme master of this style. The two operas celebrate the glory of great singing, uniting extraordinarily memorable melodies with vocal virtuosity within an intense romantic narrative.

The two heroines are superbly contrasting examples of what makes bel canto repertoire so exciting. Each requires the ultimate in vocal technique, but also the ultimate in emotional investment. Lucia is the more lyrical of the two roles. Her music is crowned by the famous mad scene, one of the great vocal tours de force in all of opera – a high-wire act of vocal acrobatics and searing emotional impact. The role of Norma combines the requirement of stupendous vocal agility with a dramatic grandeur that makes her among the most challenging characters to sing and act in the entire operatic repertoire.

Of course, these operas are not one-woman shows; each needs an exceptionally strong team of principal artists to fulfill the vocal and dramatic demands. Lucia's Edgardo is one of bel canto's most passionate and hot-blooded heroes, while Norma's Pollione requires a heroic machismo that makes him unique in this repertoire. Adalgisa in Norma has much ravishing music to sing (including three of bel canto's most rewarding duets), and the powerful dramatic thrust in music for Lucia's nasty brother Enrico can raise the roof with excitement. For the two bass roles – Raimondo in Lucia, Oroveso in Norma – a singer of innate majesty is required.

The two casts are both made up of very important artists, from whom you can expect sensational singing. Our leading ladies – Albina Shagimuratova (Lucia) and Sondra Radvanovsky (Norma), both previously triumphant at Lyric – have made a stupendous impact internationally in their roles. The return to Lyric of our Edgardo, Piotr Beczala, and the debuts of our Raimondo, Adrian Sâmpetean, and our Pollione, Russell Thomas, are awaited with equal anticipation, as are two remarkable Ryan Opera Center alumni – Quinn Kelsey (Enrico) and Elizabeth DeShong (Adalgisa) and – and the return of longtime Lyric favorite Andrea Silvestrelli (Oroveso).

Of course, neither of these operas can succeed without brilliance from the pit and from the production team. Our two debuting Italian conductors, Enrique Mazzola (Lucia) and Riccardo Frizza (Norma), have made bel canto a specialty in many major international houses. We can fully expect the performances to boast an authenticity of style that will hugely enhance our audiences' experience of these pieces. Lyric is presenting them in productions by Graham Vick (Lucia) and Kevin Newbury (Norma) that will each bring provocative and illuminating new insights to these justly beloved masterpieces.

Lyric

From the President

The 2016-17 season here at Lyric Opera of Chicago is going to be one of the most exciting in recent memory, and my wife and I are looking forward to every production. I expect you are, too.

I'm particularly excited about the launch of the new Ring cycle with Das Rheingold. The first time I experienced the complete Ring, I wondered, as with many Ring neophytes, if this was just going to be four very long nights in a dark room! But I found that it is spellbinding, and that the longest of the operas seems to slip away in minutes. It's a profound, transformative experience, and the fact that we're creating a brand-new expression of the Ring makes me very proud of the artistic choices we've made at Lyric.

It's likely that the production you're enjoying tonight is benefiting from an ambitious stage-improvement project, the first step of which was implemented over the summer. Three new stage lifts, a turntable, and 16 new point hoists (individual motorized lines that can lift sets or people in the air) are enabling us to present Das Rheingold, Les Troyens, and The Magic Flute. None of those new productions would have been possible were it not for that initial investment. Over the next two years we will see the second phase of the project, including additional stage lifts and point hoists, plus various other crucial technical capabilities. This will ensure our being able to present future productions exactly as our directors have imagined them, and in a safe, efficient manner. We're exceedingly grateful to our Breaking New Ground campaign donors whose generosity has made this possible.

Along with our investments backstage to enable these amazing productions, we are also investing in the front of the house to enhance your experience at Lyric. New concierge greeters in the lobby, additional ticket scanners to improve traffic flow, and better signage for our first-time guests are just a few of the changes you'll be experiencing this season. We are looking for fresh ways to make your total Lyric experience a delight, from the moment you purchase your ticket until you depart after a wonderful performance.

The future of opera and of Lyric is dependent not only on the loyalty of our longtime audience members, but also on our ability to cultivate the next generation. As we all know, "millennials" have many more opportunities for entertainment and cultural consumption than ever before. In achieving our goal of continually attracting and engaging younger audiences, we've embraced the types of media that they're familiar with. Many of you who spend time online, particularly in social media, have noticed in the past year many more banner ads for Lyric productions or mentions and "likes" on Facebook and Twitter and photos on Instagram. I'm delighted to see social media channels bringing greater awareness of Lyric and its exciting offerings to a whole new audience.

I use Lyric's website on a regular basis, whether to provide background information for an upcoming production or to review the biography of an artist I don't know. It's not unusual for me to snap a picture of a current production banner and post it on my Facebook page!

This season has so much to offer, from the Ring and Les Troyens to a new Magic Flute and star-studded productions of Carmen and Eugene Onegin. The richness and diversity of opera and the world-class quality of our orchestra, chorus, and artists remind us how valuable and exciting the Lyric experience is and how fortunate we are to have an opera company of this caliber in the city of Chicago.

BRINGING UNTOLD STORIES TO LIFE

Lyric's groundbreaking
Chicago Voices initiative

By Kamaria Morris

Renée Fleming, Lyric's creative consultant, is the guiding spirit behind Chicago Voices, a two-year program encompassing performances and participatory events that celebrate the city's highly diverse vocal scene.

KYLE FLORACKER

Chicago is renowned worldwide for its diverse and influential musical life. It's the home of Lyric Opera of Chicago and the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, but it's also, as noted by Rolling Stone magazine, a "central player in the history of American music, from the advent of blues, which was arguably the start of rock & roll."

Beginning in 1950, the legendary Chess Records (now the Blues Heaven Foundation) was making history here, with such spectacular musicians as Willie Dixon, Howlin' Wolf, and Chuck Berry creating their distinctive, pioneering interpretations of the blues. Artists as varied as Benny Goodman and Kanye West, Chaka Khan and Ramsay Lewis, Tom Paxton and Mavis Staples, were all born in Chicago. It's the birthplace of house music and gospel, soul and jazz, each with an unmistakable "Chicago style" of its own.

As a self-proclaimed "music fanatic," Renée Fleming is attracted to every type of music that audiences can enjoy in Chicago. The internationally celebrated soprano is well aware of both the city's rich musical heritage and Chicago's continuing emergence as a vocal hotspot. It's been the ideal city for Fleming to explore musical genres and the human voice over the past six years, in her extraordinary work as Lyric's creative consultant. In 2013, Fleming developed and hosted American Voices, a week-long music festival for the Kennedy Center in Washington, D.C., later seen as a documentary on the PBS series

Great Performances. From that project came Fleming's desire to take it another step, focusing the activities and lens exclusively on the vibrant musical life of Chicago.

Lyric's general director, Anthony Freud, had been a participant in one of the American Voices seminars. Fleming asked him, "Do you think we can do something like this in Chicago?" The idea appealed immediately to Freud, who was intrigued by its potential to accelerate Lyric's engagement with communities across the city. "We were all really excited about this new idea, one that would prove to be the most ambitious community-engagement program we have ever taken on," he says. After numerous discussions, much preliminary research, and two successful pilot programs, a plan materialized with Lyric Unlimited, Lyric's education/community engagement division, providing the perfect launchpad for Chicago Voices.

In January 2016 at The Hideout, a funky northside music venue tucked into Chicago's Noble Square neighborhood, Chicago Voices was introduced, with Fleming as its guiding spirit. This is a multi-year program, celebrating the city's vibrant, diverse vocal culture and exploring the untold stories of Chicago communities. There are four signature elements:

- Community Created Performances;
- a citywide celebration encompassing participatory events and performances;
- an all-star, multi-genre gala concert;
- expert panels and master classes.

A major project of Chicago Voices was Chicago SING!, which toured the city last summer to record Chicagoans singing their favorite songs!

To connect Chicago Voices with communities throughout the city, Lyric is partnering with Chicago Public Library, Chicago History Museum, and Columbia College on the initiative.

It was important to both Fleming and Freud that Chicago Voices invite audiences to connect with the musical genres and styles that speak to them. Every aspect of the initiative is meant to celebrate the human voice, while also highlighting and amplifying the narratives of everyday Chicagoans.

With those goals firmly in mind, Community Created Performances became Chicago Voices' first major venture. Shortly after the launch, groups of Chicagoans were invited to submit stories based on their unique communities and what they've experienced within those communities. Specifically, Lyric hoped to bring to light parts of life in Chicago that may not appear on the news or in the papers. "We really wanted groups to apply from all backgrounds and skill levels," says Cayenne Harris, director of Lyric Unlimited. "It was important for us that community members were able to share the stories that were significant and powerful to them."

The application process encouraged groups to define what community they were a part of, and what story their group hoped to tell. Applicants were also asked to utilize the Chicago Public Library 2016 One Book, One Chicago theme, "Chicago: The City That Gives," to help frame the stories of their communities.

From the applicant groups, semifinalists were chosen, after which the public had the opportunity to vote for the stories they found most compelling. The three groups receiving the largest number of votes went through a 16-week creative process to develop an original music-theater work, with the support of a Lyric-hired professional team and a $10,000 stipend. Groups turned their stories into fully-realized productions, which were presented to the public on September 24 in a free performance at the Harris Theater.

As a world-class opera company, Lyric presents mainstage performances that are planned years in advance, cast with renowned artists, and rehearsed meticulously from top to bottom, controlled completely by a rigorous and well-travelled path from rehearsal room to stage. When it comes to presenting any production, no detail is overlooked. In contrast, Community Created Performances turns this model on its ear. "We wanted to put the creative control into the hands of communities to tell their own stories through song," says Freud. "This is exciting for us, as we want to cast a spotlight on the untold stories of Chicagoans and the tremendous creativity that exists in our city."

In an ever-changing digital climate, technology shaped the Community Created Performances in numerous ways. Chicago Public Library (CPL), which in 2015 provided over 2.5 million free internet sessions to Chicago residents in their 80 branches citywide, played a vital role in introducing community members to Chicago Voices. Information sessions were held at 11 neighborhood branches to spread the word about the program, encourage participation, and address any lingering questions community members might have. Groups were able to utilize the library's computers to apply for the program online. "The Chicago Public Library's network of branches and deep roots in every Chicago neighborhood, along with the free internet access they provide to the public, is invaluable to the success of Chicago Voices," says Cayenne Harris.

Once the application period was officially opened on January 7, many groups applied to tell their story, much to Fleming's delight. "An amazing range of ensembles applied to be a part of the Community Created Performances," she recalls. "The diversity and originality was fantastic, and so characteristic of Chicago." Groups ranged from a spoken-word poetry slam team to a senior-citizen writing circle and an LGBTQ residential community, among others.

With the help of a panel comprised of CPL employees, each applicant group's submission was diligently reviewed and scored based on predetermined criteria, such as the group's interest in creating a new work and performing it, their community's story, and the connection to the One Book, One Chicago theme. Eight wonderfully gifted and imaginative groups were selected as semifinalists. Lyric created video profiles for all eight, and featured the profiles online for public voting. More than 16,000 votes were cast before the top three finalist groups emerged: Harmony, Hope & Healing; Kirin-Gornick Band; and Tellin' Tales Theatre.

Harmony, Hope & Healing (HHH) provides music-based programming to homeless and underserved communities, offering emotional and spiritual support to help them prevail daily over their struggles to achieve better lives. HHH works throughout many neighborhoods in south and west Chicago, training their more than 800 participants in holistic healing methods through music and the arts. Using the curative power of music, HHH offers participants the means to develop the inner resources to break the cycles of poverty, addiction, and abuse.

The story of the Kirin-Gornick Band (KGB) follows the lifelong collaboration of the group members, revealing how the rich history of traditional Eastern European tambura music impacts people's lives in Chicago. This music is deeply integrated in the culture and community of the former Yugoslavia and has long been responsible for helping bring together people from disputing backgrounds. The band members have continued that pattern by maintaining their lifelong connections to both their Chicagoan and Croatian roots. They bring these connections to life by performing at many cultural events and celebrations across the city.

Tellin' Tales Theatre (TTT) provides unique opportunities for members, both with and without physical and mental disabilities, to perform together. Their group shares personal stories of their company members about the daily struggles of life, pointing out the ways in which our differences make us the same. TTT has successfully created a sense of community for its performers, while encouraging them to express their personal stories with the world in a theatrical setting.

Starting in June 2016, the three groups embarked on the journey to bring their stories to the stage. "For the finalists, the creative process began the most exciting period, making their ideas come to life with professional support from Lyric," says Fleming. "And it was thrilling for us, too, seeing authentic voices of Chicago's communities take shape onstage." Each group was supported in the process by an artistic team, including animateurs (facilitators), scriptwriters, songwriters, directors, and a production and costume designer.

Groups met with their teams beginning in June for 4-6 hours per week in unique rehearsal settings that worked best for the participants. The three groups' locations represent the southwest (KGB), west (HHH), and north (TTT) regions of Chicago. The groups, ranging from 10-25 individuals, including their creative teams, met in large spaces that allowed for group activities, such as theaters, churches, and community centers.

During the first five weeks, each group utilized story-building exercises and activities, such as improvisation techniques and group storytelling. This helped the animateur and scriptwriter develop the group's chosen story and assist them in producing an appropriate script. After the story's building blocks were securely in place, the songwriter, with significant input from the group's participants, helped turn elements of that story into a score accompanying the script. Once script and songwriting were complete, staging of each show began, led by the director, and the stories of each group began to emerge.

"All of the HHH participants involved in this program have truly enjoyed the process of preparing to craft and perform the HHH Story," says the group's community lead, Marge Nykaza. "It has been a time of great introspection for individuals and a time of great joy for our community." Sophie Wingland, who serves as animateur for KGB notes, "This project has the potential to build so many bridges between never-before-connected groups of people." For scriptwriter Erin Austin of TTT, "My personal goal as scriptwriter is to help shape the group's story in a way that conveys the issues and themes that are important to them, while celebrating the ideas of each member of the ensemble in one way or another." Austin heard a TTT group member comment during the creative process, "Don't assume if you don't have a voice, you can't speak. And if you can't move, that doesn't mean you can't dance. Don't ask if someone can or can't do something. Instead, ask how they can do it."

The artistic teams worked with the groups to develop their stories into original songs and scripts that would become the performance presented to the public on September 24 as Chicago Voices Presents: Stories and Songs of Chicago at the Harris Theater. Before this final performance, the groups each presented portions of their work for public readings at venues in their own communities.

The Community Created Performances program (which will be offered again in 2017) and the broader Chicago Voices initiative were created out of a desire for Lyric to expand the traditional role of an opera company within the community. In January and February of 2017, Chicago Voices will present a series of events geared to further highlight the city's vocal culture. A planned set of talks and performances at the Chicago History Museum will explore musical styles with Chicago ties such as gospel, classical, and hip-hop.

On the weekend of February 2-4, 2017, a multi-day series of expert panels and master classes will be presented in partnership with Columbia College Chicago. These events will coincide with the Chicago Voices Gala Concert, a special, one-night-only musical celebration featuring superstar artists from a variety of genres at Lyric's legendary Civic Opera House on the evening of February 4, 2017. Performers include Fleming, John Prine, Matthew Polenzani, Shemekia Copeland, The Handsome Family, and others. "I believe that we've created something for everyone," says Renée Fleming. "I'm truly fascinated by the many voices that make Chicago the city that it is. Whether you are an opera singer or someone who just sings in the shower, singing is a vital part of every culture. The voice is the musical instrument that each of us is born with – possibly our most elemental, personal form of artistic expression – and I believe it can help bring us together."

Scene 2. The Great Hall of Lammermoor Castle
Scene 3. The Ravenswood cemetery

In a feud between the Scottish families of Ravenswood and Lammermoor, Enrico Ashton of Lammermoor wrongfully holds the estates of Edgardo of Ravenswood. In addition, Enrico's political activity against the king has placed him in a perilous situation, and he has resolved to reestablish his family's position by marrying his sister Lucia to Lord Arturo Bucklaw.

ACT ONE

Scene 1. Normanno orders his henchmen to discover the identity of the man whom Lucia is secretly meeting each day before dawn. Enrico is frustrated because he cannot persuade his sister to accept a marriage that will save him politically, and Normanno tells him his suspicions concerning Lucia's lover. Enrico's outburst is interrupted by the return of his men confirming that Lucia's lover is in fact his enemy Edgardo.

Scene 2. Lucia awaits Edgardo in the woods by a fountain whose legend of a bloody phantom alternately fascinates and repels her. Edgardo arrives with the news that he must leave for France. He tells Lucia that before departing he wishes to ask Enrico for her hand in marriage. Terrified of her brother's reaction, Lucia begs him not to. She tries to calm him when he renews his vows of vengeance upon her family. They solemnly pledge their troth by exchanging rings and vows of eternal fidelity, promising to write during their separation.

ACT TWO

Scene 1. In his fury at his sister's betrayal, Enrico has concluded marriage preparations for the union of his sister with Arturo. Despite his insistence, Enrico has failed to secure Lucia's consent to this arranged marriage. Lucia remains obstinate even when presented with a letter, forged in Edgardo's handwriting, announcing his marriage to another woman. Enrico explodes in rage against his sister. At Raimondo's fervent pleading, the exhausted Lucia finally gives in.

Scene 2. The wedding party has assembled and Lucia has scarcely signed the marriage contract when Edgardo bursts into the castle demanding an explanation. Upon seeing the contract with Lucia's signature, he curses her and her family forever. Enrico finally places his sister's hand in Arturo's.

ACT THREE

Scene 1. In a tower of Edgardo's gloomy castle, Enrico arrives at night to challenge him to a duel the next morning.

Scene 2. The wedding celebration is in progress when Raimondo brings the terrible news that Lucia has slain her bridegroom and has gone mad. In her delirium, Lucia wanders into the hall and imagines a wedding ceremony with her beloved Edgardo. Enrico returns and finds his sister insane. He suffers remorse as she loses all reason while begging Edgardo to pray at her tomb.

Scene 3. Unaware of all that has happened, Edgardo imagines Lucia's happiness with Arturo and berates her for her infidelity. A party of mourners leaving the castle brings word of Lucia's misfortune. As Edgardo sets off to see her one last time, Raimondo stops him with the news of Lucia's death. In his grief, Edgardo stabs himself, hoping to be reunited with Lucia in heaven.

Previously at Lyric:

Gilda/Rigoletto (2012-13).

Iconic coloratura roles in 19th-century Italian opera have been central to the career of the internationally celebrated Russian soprano. She has triumphed as Lucia (Metropolitan Opera, La Scala, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Berlin, Moscow, St. Petersburg, role debut in Houston), Violetta (Houston, Moscow), and Gilda (Lyric, San Francisco). This season Shagimuratova marks her return to Houston Grand Opera as Konstanze (she is a proud alumna of the Houston Grand Opera Studio), the Vienna State Opera as Donna Anna, and Covent Garden as Aspasia/Mozart's Mitridate, re di Ponto. Having attracted international attention as Gold Medal winner of Moscow's 2007 Tchaikovsky Competition, Shagimuratova debuted in Europe under Riccardo Muti as the Queen of the Night (Salzburg Festival). Closely identified with that role, she has sung it at the Met, the Lucerne Festival, the Bolshoi, La Scala (DVD), Covent Garden, and the leading houses of Vienna, Munich, Berlin, Hamburg, San Francisco, Los Angeles, and Houston. Recent successes onstage also include Konstanze (Met, role debut), Lyudmila/Ruslan and Lyudmila (Bolshoi), Donna Anna (Glyndebourne, also in Covent Garden's production in London and for Japan tour), and Violetta (Bolshoi). Concert works have brought Shagimuratova to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Houston Symphony, the Maggio Musicale Fiorentino, and the Danish National Symphony.

ENRIQUE MAZZOLA

(Conductor)

Lyric debut

The Italian conductor is artistic and music director of the Orchestre National d'Île de France, resident orchestra of the Philharmonie, Paris's newest concert hall. Greatly admired internationally in bel canto, Mazzola has conducted that repertoire at the Metropolitan Opera (L'elisir d'amore), Glyndebourne (last season's company premiere of Poliuto, this season's new production of The Barber of Seville), La Scala (Don Pasquale), the Teatro del Maggio Musicale Fiorentino (L'italiana in Algeri), the Bolshoi Theatre (La sonnambula), and the major houses of Strasbourg, Berlin, and Tokyo. From Lucy to Lucia

By Jesse Rosenberg

Gaetano Donizetti's Lucia di Lammermoor, based on the novel The Bride of Lammermoor by Sir Walter Scott (1819), is the only opera still regularly performed among the dozens derived from Scott's popular tales. Scott was a master of plot development and characterization informed by psychological insight and broad human sympathies. He generally avoided contemporary settings, preferring adventures set against historical backdrops such as the Crusades, the Norman conquest of England, and Highlander rebellions in Scotland. The popular appeal of his novels, amounting almost to a mania across much of 19th-century Europe, is easily understood.

But to turn even the most appealing novel into an opera is a challenging enterprise. Why are so many more operas derived from plays (The Marriage of Figaro, The Barber of Seville, Norma, Ernani, Rigoletto, La forza del destino, Don Carlos, Otello, Falstaff, Tosca, Madama Butterfly) than from narrative fiction (Carmen, La bohème, Manon Lescaut)? A play doesn't need to be dramatized, rendering adaptation vastly simpler. By contrast, a novel (Prosper Mérimée's Carmen), short story (Thomas Mann's Death in Venice), or narrative poem (Alexander Pushkin's Eugene Onegin) demands a more elaborate reworking of the material to provide a suitable structure for opera.

When drawing a libretto from a lengthy novel such as The Bride of Lammermoor or Cervantes's Don Quixote, there is the additional requirement of extreme condensation: numerous episodes and characters, as well as long stretches of narration without dialogue, must be ruthlessly pared down to reach the librettist's goal: a skeletal frame that will be brought to flesh-and-blood life by music. In this respect, the achievement of Lucia librettist Salvatore Cammarano is monumental.

Cammarano directly addressed the difficulties in his preface to Lucia's first published libretto. There he noted that in converting the novel from narrative to libretto, he had to surmount "numerous obstacles" by effecting changes to the story, including the omission of several important characters and altering Edgar Ravenswood's death. These changes, Cammarano insisted, shouldn't be seen as impertinent meddling with a great literary work, but as decisions made necessary by restrictions of the dramatic medium. In fact, there's rather more to it: also involved are formal conventions of opera and the practical considerations of a busy theatrical season in 1830s Naples. Several episodes from the novel will illustrate these points.

Edgar's shocking arrival during Lucy's wedding is presented in the third-to-last chapter of Scott's novel. Having been deceived into believing that Edgar has broken his vow and abandoned her, Lucy reluctantly signs the marriage contract binding her to Arthur Bucklaw. Immediately after she places her signature on the document, Edgar intrudes, to everyone's amazement, and demands an account of the goings-on. Up to this point, Cammarano's libretto follows Scott to the letter, but then comes a striking divergence: in the novel a lengthy discussion ensues, with many characters taking part. Lucy's brother insists on his right to challenge the intruder to a duel, and Arthur Bucklaw responds by insisting that it is he, Lucy's husband, who should demand an accounting from Edgar. Then the officiating cleric cites a biblical passage (Numbers 30:5-6) to support the contention that Lucy's previous vows to Edgar are not binding. Throughout this part of the conversation, Edgar insists that Lucy alone provide the explanation he seeks, but she contributes just five faltering words. Once Edgar examines the contract and is convinced that Lucy has willingly reneged on her vows to him, he seizes the gold piece he had given her as a pledge – along with the written counterpart to that pledge that Lucy's mother had secured – and throws both items into the chimney fire before taking his leave.

This is the source from which Cammarano devised the text for one of Donizetti's most glorious musical accomplishments: the so-called “sextet” (Donizetti and Cammarano designated it a finale, and it’s actually laid out as a quartet with chorus, with two further solo roles merely doubling certain lines present in the ensemble). Cammarano realized that the prima donna’s part in this crucial scene couldn’t be limited to the five words she pronounces in the novel. Although Scott’s Lucy is too stunned to say more, she’s obviously feeling a great deal here. This scene naturally calls for a prominent vocal presence for Donizetti’s heroine, which in turn calls for words – that is, additional text. Given that the text is sung by the star soprano, it naturally dominates the musical texture.

Cammarano also understood that while the novel’s various characters express their reactions in succession, Donizetti’s music could unite them simultaneously, gathering them into an imposing sonic mass to create maximum excitement. With this in mind, Cammarano crafted equivalent-length stanzas for each soloist as well as the chorus, guaranteeing that all parts could work together as a cohesive musical climax.

It doesn’t detract from Donizetti’s genius to point out how dependent he was on the framework provided by Cammarano. To be sure, Donizetti took the ball, ran with it, scoring a touchdown – but he couldn’t have taken the ball in the first place had Cammarano not expertly passed it to him. The librettist’s savvy departure from Scott should be seen as the necessary precondition for one of the composer’s undisputed greatest hits.

The mad scene likewise presents a notably expanded textual and vocal part for the operatic Lucia, in comparison with the corresponding passage in Scott’s novel. His Lucia barely articulates anything before the horrified onlookers: she merely “gibbered, made mouths, and pointed at them with her bloody fingers, with the frantic gestures of an exulting demoniac” – impressive enough in narrative fiction, but hopelessly inadequate for the final number of an operatic protagonist!

Among the many new lines of text that Cammarano introduces at this point, several have clear musical implications. For example, Lucia refers to sounds that she imagines she is hearing. Although she has emerged from the room where she murdered her husband, she now claims that she has just been listening to “the sweet sound” of Edgardo’s voice – and Donizetti complies, brilliantly, by supplying a reminiscence of the music she sang in Act One when describing the “muffled cry” of the ghost she had once come upon by a haunted well. The heroine’s disconnect from reality is thus brought home with shocking effectiveness. She then imagines that the ghost is before her once more, but this is followed by another musical reminiscence from Act One: the melody of farewell by which Lucia and Edgardo pledged eternal faithfulness, a musico-dramatic non sequitur that further underscores her madness.

Throughout the mad scene, librettist and composer are working at such a deep level of reciprocal understanding that it becomes pointless to argue which one follows the lead of the other. For this scene, Cammarano needed something that Sir Walter Scott did not provide: extensive text for Lucia to sing to render her madness directly audible. Cammarano did this through lines indicating the disintegration of her grasp on reality, as she flies from one distorted memory to another without any logical connection between them. Through a combination of vocal and orchestral reminiscences, Donizetti fully realized the madness of Lucia which Cammarano had mapped out so astutely.

Death is handled quite differently in the novel and the opera. Cammarano’s Arturo is killed by the mad Lucia, whom he has just married, whereas Scott’s Arthur recovers from his wounds and relocates abroad (a simple desire for greater shock value probably accounts for this modification). Another death, that of Edgar/Edgardo, happens in both the novel and opera, but in a radically different manner. Having agreed to fight a duel with Lucy’s brother, Edgar chooses a sword, mounts his horse, and races impetuously to the assigned location – so impetuously that he neglects to attend to the terrain. As a result, he and his horse fall into quicksand and thus meet their untimely end. There is shock value to spare here, but while the opera’s creators must have appreciated this episode, the impossibility of staging it convincingly was obvious. Edgardo would die, and what better way than suicide – the perfect expression of the despair that makes his life unbearable?

These are a few aspects of Scott’s novel that, when compared with Donizetti, can illuminate the nature of opera itself. Two others should be mentioned. In the novel, Lucy’s formidable mother pressures her into a loveless marriage, a cruel function carried out in the opera by Lucia’s brother Enrico. Why the difference? The company of singers available during the autumn 1835 season at the Teatro San Carlo in Naples, which had commissioned the opera, included only one female singer capable of a major role: the soprano Fanny Tacchinardi. There was, however, an outstanding baritone on the roster, Domenico Cosselli, whom Donizetti greatly admired – and this was enough to settle the matter. The primary villain whose machinations sabotage young love, leading to the tragic conclusion, had to be converted from a female role to a male one.

Lucia’s plot involves the time-honored “star-crossed lovers” theme known though Romeo and Juliet and a hundred other stories: in the context of some ongoing conflict between families, countries, classes, or religions, a young man and a young woman, belonging respectively to the opposing sides, fall in love. But why are the Ashtons and the Ravenswoods such implacable enemies to each other? On this point, Cammarano’s libretto is mystifying; we learn virtually nothing about family history. Scott, in contrast, includes much background information regarding the rapid evolution of Scottish political society in the 17th and 18th centuries, and the strained relations between two religious currents (Presbyterianism, now gaining ascendancy and tactically supported by the Ashtons, and the Anglican rite still practiced by Edgar Ravenswood). Scott also devises several episodes presenting individual family members in personal conflicts that reflect these broader adversarial dynamics.

NANCY SORINSEN (Callas); DAVID H. FISHMAN (Sutherland); DAN REST (Dessay)

In reading the novel, then, we understand why the families are enemies, and how unlikely it is that Lucy and Edgar will marry and live happily ever after. But in the opera, we know no more about the reasons behind the conflict than we know what the Montagues have against the Capulets. We hear only a few fleeting lines from Edgardo about the persecution and "usurpation" his family has suffered at the Ashtons' hands. In short, we're left with the bare fact of enmity, seemingly fixed and eternal, in the face of which the devotion of two young lovers doesn't stand a chance.

Why did Cammarano and Donizetti feel that the reasons for the enmity could be dispensed with? This may well be another case where practical decisions were paramount: in an opera, designed for performance onstage in a single evening, we lack the leisure time for an exposition of the many interesting historical details found in Scott's novel. The only truly practical solution was to omit the backstory, but it may also be that the slashing of expository detail reflects a basic insight into enmity. It would be interesting to know why the Ashtons hate Edgardo, but it doesn't matter. Once hatred takes root, nursed over the years through resentment and oaths of revenge, it becomes its own raison d'être. In Lucia di Lammermoor, the enmity between two families becomes something that it never was in The Bride of Lammermoor: the existential backdrop to a tragic destiny.

Jesse Rosenberg, Clinical Associate Professor of Musicology at Northwestern University, is a specialist in 19th and 20th century Italian opera.

It was 20 years ago in Florence when I directed this Lucia for my friend Mariella Devia. We had recently done I Puritani together in Venice, and the clarity of her sound and musicality had revealed to me how bel canto was completely rooted in classicism. So I approached this Lucia as a late-classical work, rather than the stirrings of melodramma italiana – although they are undoubtedly there. I chose to restore the period of the novel with all its 18th-century political calculation – emotion through the prism of the third eye. For all its wild remote setting and tale of doomed love, Lucia is not Romantic – we are not yet defying nature nor the gods – just each other.

- Do you think Lucia ever had a fair chance? Given the time period and circumstances, is there any way that the odds could have ended up in her favor?
- Do you think anyone can be labeled the villain in this opera, if everyone was only following the obvious paths of action set by precedents of the time and place?
- What similarities do you see between Lucia and Romeo and Juliet, or any another “rivaling families” stories?

BACKSTAGE LIFE: Up close and personal at Lyric

Amy C. Thompson

What is your role here at Lyric, and how long have you held the position?

I've been at Lyric for nine years and I am an assistant stage manager specializing in supertitles, which are the English translations of foreign-language lyrics. I keep the titles in time with the music, and ensure the formatting is consistent from production to production. I do a lot of preparation with the text so that I can "call" the show on performance nights, meaning I manage the titles in live time.

What led you to work at Lyric?

I went for coffee with the head of the stage-management department at the time. We talked about everything under the sun and at the end, she mentioned she had an open position in her department. At the time, I was moving around from city to city doing freelance stage management work for various opera and theater companies.

I ended up applying for the position and I got it! I didn't start off doing titles, but I had the opportunity to call them for one show and I completely fell in love! When I was asked if I wanted to keep doing them, it was a dream come true.

What's a typical day like for you?

I review scores for upcoming operas or concerts, complete edits from our designers, and ensure things are in order for the pre-opera talks (spotlights, audio selections, etc.). On a performance night, I'm calling titles for the operas.

What's the most challenging aspect of your job?

Keeping all the balls in the air! With eight operas and several concerts, it's a lot of juggling.

What keeps you committed to the work you do?

The adrenaline rush of calling a performance. Thousands of people watch my every move (even if they don't know it!) while I'm at work. That might not sound thrilling to most, but it is for me. I'm adding to the audience's enjoyment and understanding, which is very important and fulfilling.

What's something about your job that people might not know?

That titles are not automated. You don't just hit a button and the titles appear and keep their own time. Opera is a live event; anything can happen and you have to have a measure of control. That means that every ten seconds, I'm telling an operator to bring up a title at a specific speed, or I'm telling him to cross fade it to another title, or to black out. Of all the stage managers at Lyric, I call the most cues from the supertitles booth!

A favorite Lyric moment?

Seeing Lawrence Brownlee in our production of Cinderella last season. He was having so much fun, and he has the voice of an angel. It's not uncommon for people to feel transported and enlightened by opera, and of course, they feel respect and admiration for our singers. But to see the audience members literally losing their composure during his performance was an entirely different experience and it was magical.

Beyond opera, what are your other passions?

My infant daughter, Avery Nicole. She's so spunky and full of personality; she loves to dance. My husband and I like to sit with her in cafés and talk about our day or maybe our work week, and she'll just look around and find things to think about. Sometimes people come up to us and say they can't believe she sits quietly. I guess we're pretty spoiled!

EXPERIENCE Lyric

Christopher Carlo and Robert Chaney: For the Love of the Show

“Opera as a whole should be – and is – an overwhelming theatrical experience. Sound, sight, dance and drama are presented in one melded art form; that it is the one musical theater presentation that does not have a ‘click track’ or amplification adds to its purity and power. In a city that is becoming a national theater center, Lyric is still the Grand Dame in town.”

This is high praise coming from Chicago cultural moguls Chris Carlo and Bob Chaney, former owners of the iconic Music Box Theatre in the Lakeview neighborhood and lifelong opera and musical theater fans. Both Chris and Bob were raised in the San Francisco area and had access to that city’s incredible cultural institutions growing up, influences of which are certainly apparent today.

Bob came to appreciate stage productions as an usher at the War Memorial Opera House, the Curran Theatre, the Geary Theatre, and the Masonic Auditorium while still in high school. “I think it is fair to say that musical theater seeped into my DNA.” Chris, on the other hand, had his musical fixes courtesy of his Uncle Frank, a first-generation Italian who had reel-to-reel tapes of Carmen, Tosca, Aida and Madama Butterfly as well as posters from La Scala lining his walls. “I remember breaking his Aida tape when I was four years old, but he wanted to get a new reel-to-reel player anyway, so I was lucky not to be punished.”

As former theater owners, Chris and Bob empathize with the increasingly urgent enterprise of growing new audiences, but feel that Lyric is already steps ahead in reaching the next generation of opera lovers. “We love seeing young people at the opera. They even dress better than we do! Congratulations to Lyric for recognizing the college campuses in the area and making affordable tickets available to that ready audience.” They have also noticed the enhanced community engagement and education initiatives under the Lyric Unlimited umbrella, applauding Lyric for introducing opera and theater to students, especially high school students who may decide to pursue higher education in music. “Even I took singing lessons and learned Nadir’s aria from The Pearl Fishers when I was in high school,” Chris says. “I wasn’t very good, but one of my high school friends actually went on to sing with the San Francisco Opera Company.”

None can better appreciate Lyric’s expanded programming than the gentlemen who scheduled black and white classics in on in the astoundingly beautiful building.” As someone who once broke into the shuttered Orpheum Theatre in Oakland just to look at the interior design, Bob certainly recognizes the lasting effect a building’s architecture can have on a first-time theatergoer, a feature Lyric regulars have been able to appreciate for years.

As grand theater enthusiasts, Chris and Bob also understand the value of production. While recently revising their wills to include Lyric, they found out about the Breaking New Ground Campaign, currently in its final phase of raising funds for much-needed improvements backstage. Although their planned gift will presumably not materialize for many years, Lyric can purchase new stage machinery immediately based on their commitment. Thrilled to be able to enjoy their future investment now, Chris and Bob hope that new technology might entice more producers to work with Lyric, an attractive prospect for lovers of a spectacular show.

Chris and Bob’s professional background also allows them to value Lyric for what they were never able to fully embrace at their own venue: a blissfully unencumbered and fully engaging theatrical experience. “In 22 years we were never able to sit down for a movie in the Music Box Theatre; we were working. If we did take a short rest in the last corner seat in the auditorium, we counted burned-out light bulbs, focus problems, restoration and maintenance needs, temperature comfort, and patron protection. We quickly learned that the business of glamour is not a glamorous business. The patrons, of course, must never know this. Don’t tell anyone that we told you.”

If you had poured your heart and soul into restoring the classic 1929 movie house Gene Siskel once dubbed his favorite Chicago theater, surely you would worry about every burned-out light bulb, too.

—Meaghan Stainback

Bob Chaney and Chris Carlo

the matinee slot, obscure foreign films as the evening feature, and a midnight showing of Rocky Horror Picture Show, complete with props for audience interaction, all in one day. “We certainly understand from a business standpoint and are excited to see Lyric making the venue available to presentations other than grand opera. Getting people into the theater makes the opera house accessible to more people. Concert bookings such as Joe Rogan and Straight No Chaser as well as Lyric presentations of Rodgers and Hammerstein, Jane Lynch, and this season’s Lerner and Loewe My Fair Lady bring in patrons who may not be interested in [Berg’s] Wozzeck. Mixed use is a method of attraction rather than promotion and it works to get people into the venue who may then take a look at what else goes

The current focus of the Campaign is to modernize the stage of the Ardis Krainik Theatre with state-of-the-art equipment.

To that extent, we have established a new Insull Society comprised of loyal patrons who are contributing $10,000 or more for this critically important stage project. To join the Insull Society, please call (312) 827-5723.

Lyric Opera is grateful to the following donors who have made contributions of $5,000 and above to the Campaign as of September 15, 2016.

Lyric Opera is very grateful to the thousands of donors who give gifts of less than $500 to our annual campaign. Due to space limitations, we are unable to list the names of these donors, but their generosity is sincerely appreciated.

Lyric

Facilities and Services

Welcome!

Lyric Opera of Chicago welcomes you to this performance. We are very glad you are here. In order to ensure maximum enjoyment for all guests during a performance, we ask for your compliance with some simple house rules:

- Please remain silent during the performance.
- As a gesture of respect for other audience members and the performing artists, please remain seated until an act or the opera is completely over. If you need to leave the auditorium, you may not be readmitted while the performance is in progress. The usher staff will help you understand when you can be reseated.
- Do note that the program and artists are subject to change without notice.
- Please silence all electronic devices and double check that phones, pagers, watches and other personal devices are switched off before the performance begins.
- Please don't use any device with a glowing screen at any time during a performance. It is always more disruptive and distracting than you think it is.
- Noises from the lobby may disturb patrons in the auditorium during a performance.

Your understanding and cooperation are appreciated. Please let any member of Lyric's house staff know if you have any questions.

Tickets:

Buy tickets online any time via Lyric's website:

www.lyricopera.org

Pre-opera talks:

All ticketed guests are invited to attend a free pre-performance talk in the auditorium, beginning one hour before curtain time and lasting for 30 minutes. This is a great opportunity to learn more about the performance you are about to experience. Doors open for the pre-opera talks 75 minutes before the performance begins. You can feel free to choose your seat for the talk. The auditorium will be cleared after the pre-opera talk concludes.

If you arrive late:

Lyric has a tradition of starting performances right on time, and the doors to the house are closed promptly at curtain time. We realize situations arise that can delay your arrival, and we will try to accommodate latecomers in an available section of the house or at a predetermined break, which may be intermission. A video screen is available in the lobby, so you won't miss a moment of the performance. Please be aware that patrons who must leave their seats during a performance will not be readmitted until intermission or a suitable break.

Attention, Box Seat Holders:

Lyric encourages guests in box seats to share the front-of-box seating by switching seats within your box at an appropriate time during an intermission. You can make this plan, prior to the performance, if you know the others in your box. Please remember that you may need to adjust your seating plans to include patrons who do not regularly sit in your box and would be unaware of any previous seating arrangements.

Please Note:

The use of a ticket acknowledges that you have granted permission to appear in photographs, video capture and capture by other media, in all of the public spaces in the house and theater to be used by Lyric for any promotional purpose. This blanket permission releases Lyric Opera of Chicago from liability resulting from the use of such images in any medium.

First Aid:

In case of illness or injury, please inform an usher, who will call the house manager and house EMT for assistance.

Dining:

Options are available before, during (intermission), and after most Lyric performances on the main and third floors of the Civic Opera House. The Pedersen Room on the main floor accepts dining reservations while the Florian Opera Bistro on the third floor is available for walk-in dining for first seating of dinner, 4:45PM. Reservations required for matinees, second seating, and intermission walk-in. Refreshments are also available throughout most lobby areas on each floor and on the Opera Club level. Visit lyricopera.org/dine for complete details.

Patrons with Disabilities:

The Opera House is accessible to persons with physical disabilities, with elevator service to all floors except the Opera Club. The Ardis Krainik Theatre contains seating that is accessible to persons in wheelchairs, as well as seats with removable armrests. The Opera House has automatic door-openers on exterior doors, and accessible drinking fountains and public telephones. A TTY phone is available in the Box office for outgoing calls only.

Restrooms facilities for female patrons with disabilities are located on all levels of the Opera House except the Opera Club level. For male patrons, these facilities are located on all levels except the Opera Club (lower) level and the sixth floor.

Assistive listening devices for persons desiring amplification are available at no cost at any open checkroom. A valid driver's license, state identification, or major credit card is required as a security deposit.

Large print and Braille programs may be available at the main floor coat check.

Audio description, touch tours, and American Sign Language interpretation is available for select performances; please see www.lyricopera.org/accessibility for dates and details.

No Smoking Policy: In compliance with the City of Chicago ordinance, Lyric Opera of Chicago enforces a no-smoking policy throughout the Opera House and within 15 feet of our theater entrance. Thank you for your cooperation.

Public Phones:

As a courtesy to our patrons, complimentary phone service is available in the Vaughan Family Hospitality Foyer.

Lost and Found:

Please telephone (312) 827-5768 for lost items. Unclaimed articles are held for 30 days.

Other important policies:

Photography and/or audio and video recording of any kind is prohibited during the performance. You are encouraged to take photographs and share your experience on social media from the lobby and other parts of the public, non-performance spaces in the house, as well as in the house itself, but not during the performance.

Lyric, for safety reasons, has the right to inspect any large bags or packages and insist that all large backpacks, bags, luggage, etc. be checked at one of the Civic Opera House checkrooms.

Outside food and beverages may not be brought into the Civic Opera House. Refreshments may be purchased inside the opera House and limited items may be brought in with you to the performance.

Thank you again for joining us at Lyric Opera of Chicago!
