Lyric
Welcome to Lyric Opera of Chicago, where we’re excited to launch the 2017/18 season with one of opera’s most moving masterpieces, Christoph Willibald Gluck’s Orphée et Eurydice.

Operagoers who grew up with a fascination for Greek myths have marveled time and time again that, for more than four centuries, opera composers have been irresistibly drawn to these incomparable stories. Of all the many myths that have been illuminated in operatic form, none has been more popular than that of Orpheus. This is the immortal tale of the world’s greatest poet/musician, whose longing for his dead wife leads him to journey to the Underworld to bring her back to earth. From the first truly great opera – Claudio Monteverdi’s Orfeo (1607) – to today, composers have viewed Orpheus as one of the most affecting characters in Western civilization. His devotion, passion, and, ultimately, despair strike a sympathetic chord in all of us.

More than 150 years after Monteverdi came Gluck, who ennobled the Orpheus story. When Lyric previously produced Gluck’s opera 11 seasons ago, we chose the original 1762 version, with the original Italian text, and with Orpheus sung by a countertenor. Our production this season is the 1774 Paris revision in French, in its Lyric premiere, with a tenor portraying the protagonist.

Unlike the original version, the 1774 Orphée offers a marvelous virtuosity in the music for the hero. To satisfy the expectations of the Paris audience, there is also a great deal of superb ballet music, including the celebrated “Dance of the Furies” and “Dance of the Blessed Spirits.” All the musical and dramatic glory of the original version is retained in this version, making for an unforgettably beautiful retelling of the myth.

The decision to produce the 1774 version has everything to do with a collaboration with The Joffrey Ballet that I consider one of the most exciting developments at Lyric since my tenure began six years ago. All of us in this company are thrilled that the internationally renowned Joffrey dancers will perform as a crucial element of Orphée. This is a coproduction with LA Opera and Staatsoper Hamburg; I’m very pleased that the audiences of those two companies will also have the joy of experiencing this Orphée production.

Our dream of doing this Orphée has been realized thanks to the unique artist whose creative imagination will illuminate this story for all of us: the legendary John Neumeier, longtime director of the Hamburg Ballet. As director, choreographer, and designer of the sets, costumes, and lighting, John has created a magnificently unified vision of this work for our audience.

I’m delighted to welcome our Orphée, Dmitry Korchak, to Lyric. With his impressive technique, elegant musicianship, and charismatic presence, he is sure to make a memorable Lyric debut. It’s a great pleasure to welcome back Andriana Chuchman (Eurydice), a Ryan Opera Center alumna who has become one of the most musically and theatrically accomplished lyric sopranos in North America. Completing the trio of principals is Lauren Snouffer (Amour), whose sparkling voice and presence delighted us in Rusalka. On the podium is a great friend of the company, Harry Bicket, one of today’s most celebrated interpreters of pre-1800 repertoire, as he’s shown repeatedly at Lyric.

Prepare yourself for one of the most thought-provoking and deeply moving experiences you will ever have in an opera house.

From the Chairman

On behalf of the Board of Directors, I’m delighted to welcome you to Lyric Opera of Chicago.

This season is a particularly varied and distinctive one, launched with great anticipation by our opening production. From my perspective, Orphée et Eurydice is particularly thrilling in that we are working closely for the very first time with Joffrey Ballet, one of Chicago’s most distinguished performing-arts organizations. We’re breaking new ground in what creative partnerships can achieve at Lyric, and we hope it will be the first of many. It’s another example of how we continue to experiment with innovative ways to engage and delight you, raise the bar for what defines world-class opera, and expand our reach to introduce new audiences to Lyric.

Speaking personally, one of the most rewarding aspects of Lyric – not only as chairman, but as a longtime subscriber and patron – is my joy in introducing family, friends and business colleagues to the company and the art form. I hope you’ll consider doing the same! When I receive out-of-town visitors during the opera season, I always try to include an evening at Lyric. It’s inevitably a major highlight of their stay.

A Lyric performance isn’t only an opportunity to dress up and go out with your significant other or with close friends for an elegant evening – it’s also an unforgettable and rewarding experience of timeless stories set to some of the world’s greatest music and performed by many of the top artists of our day.

Lyric’s mainstage productions are, of course, the core of every season we present. But I also encourage you to explore the unique activities of Lyric Unlimited, our initiative focused on community engagement and education. It is one of the ways that the company stays relevant as a cultural-service provider to all of Chicago, whether with newly commissioned works, community-created performances or the special programs presented in dozens of public schools all over Chicago every year. The level of creativity at work in Lyric Unlimited presentations has been truly inspiring, and it has exposed the art form of opera to tens of thousands of students across Chicagoland.

By presenting opera in new and non-traditional ways, Lyric Unlimited helps to grow and expand our audiences. I invite you to join me at one of the Lyric Unlimited performances of Fellow Travelers in March or Family Day at Lyric on April 7.

At Lyric, we truly cherish our donors and patrons. We consider each one of you as members of the Lyric family. It can sometimes be trite to declare, “Every gift counts,” but at Lyric it’s true: you’re going above and beyond what you’re paying for the ticket price. You’re investing in Lyric, entrusting that we will turn your gift into great art. We take that responsibility very seriously and are constantly imagining new ways to enhance your personal experience at Lyric, build new audiences for opera, and do it all in the most cost-effective way we can.

Many thanks to all of you who play a vital role in ensuring that our great art form and our great company continue to serve Chicago and the world of opera today and in the years to come.

JUGGLING ACT

General director Anthony Freud reflects on his Lyric tenure to date

By Roger Pines
W ith thrilling new productions, exciting collaborations, important debuts, and trailblazing community-engagement initiatives, Lyric Opera of Chicago has never been a more vital or more relevant company. Credit is due in large part to the passionate leadership of Anthony Freud, general director, president, and CEO, whose tenure began on October 1, 2011.

The opening of the 2017/18 season seemed a fitting time to sit down with Freud in his spacious office at the Lyric Opera House to speak about what brought him to the company, and the joys and challenges he’s experienced since he began here. He views his job as “essentially a juggling act – it’s keeping the right range of balls in the air. On a good day it’s a dream job, and on a bad day it’s like riding a unicycle on a tightrope juggling knives!”

At the time that he was approached about this job, Freud had been aware of Lyric for as long as he’d been aware of opera (“and that’s a long time now,” he says with a smile). Growing up in London, he was an avid reader of the distinguished British magazine Opera, which covers the entire international scene. His career path led him to Sadler’s Wells Theatre, Welsh National Opera, Philips Records, then back to WNO, this time as general director. It was just a couple of months into that job that he came to Lyric for the first time.

That first performance is a vivid memory “The Barber of Seville in 1994. Carlo Rizzi, music director of WNO at the time, was at Lyric to conduct, and Tom Allen, Flicka [von Stade], Rockwell Blake, and Nicolai Ghiaurov were in the cast. I went to the opening night and the post-performance party, where I saw Mirella Freni (Ghiaurov’s wife) – she was singing opposite Plácido Domingo in Lyric’s production of Fedora. I remember, too, that Carlo and I were doing auditions in the fairly desolate, deserted auditorium of the Civic Theatre [still part of the Lyric Opera of Chicago building at that time], and who should wander in but Plácido in full white tie and tails! He was in the middle of a matinee of Fedora and was coming in to say hello.”

Of all the memories of his first Lyric experience, Freud most treasures his meetings with Lyric’s general director at the time, Ardis Krainik, “I was a rookie general director – literally in my second or third month – but I contacted her and said I was going to be in Chicago, and would she see me? She was unbelievably generous, giving me so much of her time and energy. She also introduced me to [Lyric’s longtime press representative] Danny Newman, and he, too, was very generous, feisty, and unforgettable. So years later, when the job here became a possibility, I knew about the company but was very awestruck by it.”

When the retirement of Krainik’s successor, William Mason, was announced and Freud was asked if he would be interested in the job, “I didn’t need to give a moment’s thought to my answer which, of course, was yes! I’d been general director at Houston Grand Opera since 2006, and I wasn’t looking for a new job or feeling that my time there was coming to a natural close. I’m not sure any other job opportunity would have generated the same reaction in me.”

A few hours before opening night of the 2010/11 season, Freud sat down to discuss the position with one of his most important future colleagues, the late Ken Pigott. “He was not only designated to be the next board president, but was also the chair of the search committee. This made perfect sense, in the context of a new general director needing a very close relationship with the president of his board. Our lunch at the Chicago Club turned into a three-and-a-half-hour conversation. I came away from it completely energized, with my initial excitement fueled ten-, twenty-fold.” On April 21, 2011, Freud’s appointment was announced.

His Lyric job description is essentially the same as what Freud experienced in his two previous companies, in that “this is the buck-stopping job. I’m responsible for the company artistically, administratively, and financially. Lyric, of course, is very different from WNO and HGO. I don’t believe in the concept of a generic opera company serving a generic city – opera companies are living, breathing organisms, and they have their own personalities. At the same time, cities are unique, with a unique range of opportunities and challenges.”

In moving from the U.K. to the U.S. in 2006, “I was very excited about finding a way to relate a European art form originating 400 years ago to a very un-European 21st-century city,” Freud recalls. “Then, when I came to Chicago, I wanted to understand the organization and the city, rather than coming to the job with a menu of ideas from which to select. It’s very important simply to listen. Someone in my job shouldn’t be spending their first few months doing more talking than listening.”

Early on Freud received a great deal of advice, which he both invited and welcomed. It was clear that he had to find a balance between “respecting Lyric’s extraordinary legacy and my predecessors’ extraordinary distinction, while taking the company in new directions.” Freud finds no conflict in that balance: “You honor a legacy most truthfully by understanding how you can explore new ground and new thinking, achieving exciting things that without that legacy would be impossible.”

Although a complete season conceived by Freud and music director Sir Andrew Davis wasn’t in place until 2015/16, “two days into the job, I felt fully immersed in the company,” Freud recalls. “From the first moment I was responsible for what Lyric was doing, and
Another operating principle has been to ensure that Lyric stays relevant to as many people as possible. “In the 21st century, our art form can’t take for granted its right to survive. Instead, Lyric – as one of the world’s great opera companies and a guardian of the art form – needs to be proactive in earning the interest of a broad range of audiences throughout the area we serve.” The birth of Lyric Unlimited as an important element of the company’s mission – sitting alongside Lyric’s mainstage opera seasons – was a major priority, making significant inroads in including people for whom opera and opera companies have had no relevance up to now.

Finding new ways to sustain the company as a relevant cultural service in Chicago was essential from the very first conversations Freud had with Sir Andrew Davis and creative consultant Renée Fleming, well before Freud’s own appointment was confirmed. “The three of us were absolutely in sync with one another, not only about our ambitions for Lyric but also our belief that the organization and the art form needed to evolve in new ways. That applies to repertoire, production choices, and the range of activities that have subsequently brought Lyric into regular contact with an enormous new audience.”

That brings up a concept that, in Freud’s mind, needs to be constantly redefined: “Who is your audience? To remain a relevant cultural-service provider in 2017, you have to think of your audience beyond people who buy tickets for your opera performances. You look at the audience as the full range of people whose lives you touch through the diverse range of your activity.”

Lyric is one of the largest opera companies in North America, and the owner of the continent’s second-largest opera house. “Scale is very important to our artistic identity,” notes Freud. “And scale, as we all know, represents a huge financial challenge – we can’t afford to shy away from it. We have to find a way to understand the opportunities that the scale of this opera house offers.” It was that realization that brought Freud to two of the most significant artistic challenges of his career – new productions of Berlioz’s Les Troyens and Wagner’s Ring cycle. In their very first conversation, Freud and Davis were excited to discover they were both eager to undertake those two monumental projects. “Andrew and I believed that an opera company of Lyric’s stature needed the ambition to embrace works of that scale. We worked from Day One not only to bring those ideas to fruition, but to do so in a way that was fiscally and administratively responsible.”

General director and music director were in agreement that, in Freud’s words, Les Troyens “was the greatest operatic masterpiece that Lyric had never performed.” Looking back at the rehearsals and performances, Freud concludes that “of all the projects that stretched our ability to balance our artistic, administrative, and financial responsibilities, none took us closer to breaking point than Les Troyens – it was enormous in every way.” It was, however, absolutely worth the years of planning and the extraordinary work everyone in the company contributed to the project. “We did the piece justice,” says Freud with justifiable satisfaction, “both in terms of its scale and its quality and detail.”

As for the Ring, Freud and Davis considered how Lyric could produce Wagner’s tetralogy in a way that would respect its traditions and bring something fresh to it. “We were very committed to the concept of being able to reclaim the Ring for the theater. That was reflected in our initial conversation with [director] David Pountney, who then went further than we’d ever imagined in actually setting the Ring within the skeleton of an old theater.” Freud emphasizes that “this Ring is an evolving adventure, a journey. I’m very proud of the success of Das Rheingold, the first of the four Ring operas. Knowing about the worlds we’ll explore in the three subsequent pieces, I’m excited to see how we structure that journey and bring the audience with us as we travel through the Ring.”

The same team that is creating the new Ring also was responsible for The Passenger, another milestone in Freud’s tenure. “From the moment David Pountney and [designer] Johan Engels first spoke with me about Weinberg’s The Passenger in 2009 to the first time I saw it – at Austria’s Bregenz Festival the following year – I believed in it with unequivocal commitment. I planned it in Houston when I was still general director there, and indeed, Houston Grand Opera did eventually give the piece its U.S. premiere. Although I don’t assume that what works in Houston will inevitably work in Chicago, I felt so strongly about this piece and very much wanted to prioritize it here. I was convinced that it made sense from a repertoire point of view for us to do it.”

Freud’s faith in the importance of The Passenger was justified: everyone involved in the production approached it with unstinting dedication, and the result riveted Lyric audiences. It was significant that Lyric surrounded this opera – centered on the horrors of Auschwitz – with “Memory and Reckoning,” a confluence of related activities throughout the city, which enabled the company to explore this very important subject matter in wide-ranging ways.

The public’s response to experiencing The Passenger was overwhelming: “When Andrew and I would compare notes after each performance, what thrilled us more than anything was the extended silence before the applause. If ever a piece and a performance received a tribute from an audience, nothing could be more eloquent than that silence.”

ORPHÉE ET EURYDICE

Synopsis

ACT ONE
Orphée, a choreographer, rehearses his new ballet, The Isle of the Dead – inspired by the painting of Arnold Böcklin. Orphée’s wife Eurydice, the company’s temperamental star performer, is to dance the principal role. She arrives late – they quarrel. Furious, Eurydice leaves the rehearsal.

An accident – Eurydice is dead. Friends and passersby mourn the sudden loss. In shock and tortured by grief and regret, Orphée sadly recalls his wedding. In despair, he suffers a breakdown. His assistant, Amour, comforts him, suggesting the mythical journey of Orpheus into the Underworld.

ACT TWO
In his madness, Orphée imagines himself in Hades, where the Furies angrily block his to attempt to pass through the Underworld. He begs them to pity him, explaining that if they had suffered as he has done, they would not be so indifferent. Calmed by Orphée, the Furies allow him to enter Elysium.

Orphée is astonished by the serenity and beauty of Elysium, but he feels that only after being reunited with Eurydice can he savor its joys. His impatience is finally placated when his wife is brought to him. As in the myth, the condition of her being restored to life is that he not look at her until they are back on Earth.

ACT THREE
Without looking at his wife, Orphée urges her to follow him quickly. Astonished to realize that she is still alive, Eurydice wonders how this can be, but Orphée refuses to answer any of her pleading questions. Stunned by his silence, her temperament flares up at what she perceives as his indifference. Unable to stand her pleading and accusations any longer, Orphée turns to her. Eurydice dies again. Orphée laments her death bitterly. Amour convinces him that his suffering has conquered all, and that Eurydice will live on in Orphée’s heart, and in the imaginary ballet he created.

The protagonists of Gluck’s opera have been depicted by many renowned artists, perhaps most famously by Jean-Baptiste-Camille Corot in “Orpheus Leading Eurydice from the Underworld,” painted in 1861. (Detail)

From Orfeo to Orphée: Evolution of a Masterpiece

By Roger Pines

What do composer Christoph Willibald Gluck, painter Jean-Baptiste-Camille Corot, filmmaker Jean Cocteau, and playwright Tennessee Williams have in common? An attraction to the myth of Orpheus. One can hardly blame those incomparable creators and countless others in a multitude of media, for that name belongs to one of the most touching figures in the history of Western civilization. Orpheus is a hero who has endured and, even today, retains his power to move us to tears, just as he did the Furies of the Underworld. He is, of course, a symbol of the glory of music itself, but he also embodies devoted love and – in Gluck’s opera, especially – the capability of that love to change the course of a life.

In opera, it’s Gluck’s depiction of Orpheus that we know best. The German composer’s achievement is stupendous by any standards, but doubly so when we consider that The New Grove Dictionary of Opera lists close to 60 other “Orpheus operas.” Stylistically they encompass the early Baroque (many works, most prominently Claudio Monteverdi’s L’Orfeo), the rivetingly contemporary (Darius Milhaud’s Les malheurs d’Orphée, Harrison Birtwistle’s The Mask of Orpheus), and everything in between. Gluck, however, stands alone for both the mesmerizing loveliness and the heartrending eloquence that he brought to this immortal tale.

For those of us who explored Greek myths in our youth (courtesy of such storytellers as Robert Graves and Edith Hamilton in their fabulous myth anthologies), surely no character made a more profound impression than Orpheus. We were deeply touched by his plight and devastated by its sad end. Unlike Gluck’s opera, in mythology Eros/Cupid/Love didn’t restore Eurydice to life. Instead, poor Orpheus returned from Hades to lament her death, wandering in utter misery. The Maenads – wild women who followed Dionysus – resented that Orpheus paid no attention to them. They caught him without his all-soothing lyre and tore him limb from limb. He was given a proper burial by the nine Muses, goddesses of literature, science, and the arts. Orpheus’s soul was transported to Elysium, where he was united with his beloved Eurydice.

On those occasions when Orpheus did have his lyre in hand, he gave the world music of a sort that had never been experienced before. His voice and his songs penetrated to any listener’s heart, and their beauty provided unique joy to all ears. Of course, it wasn’t only human beings who were entranced by him: Orpheus’s music was even able to tame Cerberus, the fearsome, multi-headed dog who guarded the gates of Hades, as well as the Furies.
In 1950 the legendary writer/director Jean Cocteau filmed one of the great works of postwar French cinema, Orphée, a contemporary version of the Orpheus myth that starred Jean Marais in the title role. Pictured here with Marais is Maria Casarès, who portrayed Death, embodied onscreen by a mysterious princess.

From the very earliest years of opera’s development as an art form, it was inevitable that Orpheus would attract composers. In the work that scholars consider the first surviving opera, Jacopo Peri’s Euridice (1600), the title character may be Orpheus’s wife, but he remains the protagonist. By 1607, when an aristocratic audience heard the first truly great opera, Monteverdi’s L’Orfeo, the hero’s name rightly took its place in the title. In Peri’s version Orfeo and Eurydice return together to earth and live happily ever after. In Monteverdi’s, Orfeo accepts the god Apollo’s invitation to dwell in heaven, where he’ll be able to behold Eurydice among the stars.

Do elements of the Orpheus/Eurydice story exist in other mythologies? Prof. Wendy Doniger of The University of Chicago, whose work has significantly enhanced international understanding of mythology, points to Lot’s wife in the Book of Genesis, who looks back at the doomed city of Sodom and is turned into a pillar of salt. Doniger mentions, too, that “there is also the story of bringing Persephone, daughter of the goddess Demeter, up from the dead. She’s brought back for six months of every year. There are other successful fetchings of people from the Underworld – Savitri in Hindu mythology, who retrieves her husband from death, for example. By the power of their virtue, their heroism, people in mythology bring their spouses from death.”

The great message of Gluck’s opera is that true love triumphs over death: if you love someone enough, you get them back and live happily ever after! But ultimately this piece, in whatever incarnation, is about the power of music, not only the power of love. “This is hardly your average lovesick guy,” notes Doniger. “Orpheus is the son of Calliope, the Muse of Music. If you can charm nature, then you can charm death.”

Orphée et Eurydice began life in 1762 in Vienna, in Italian, as Orfeo ed Euridice. The work embodied what came to be known as the “Gluckian reforms.” Orfeo was the first of three “reform operas” (next came Alceste, the story of a woman who literally goes through hell, Orpheus-like, to save her husband, followed by Paride ed Elena, the story of Paris and Helen of Troy). The reforms were represented by a basic idea that Gluck termed “beautiful simplicity.” He called for a new naturalness in the way a text was delivered, a no-frills attitude devoid of emoting purely for effect. In contrast to serious Italian opera of the previous generation, Gluck wanted plots that flowed in a direct way – no convolutions of any kind. He aimed to have the music “serve poetry by means of expression and by following the situations of the story, without interrupting the action or stifling it with a useless superfluity of ornaments.” All of that came into play in Orfeo, which offered an austerely lovely style. The work consistently focused on the protagonist; Orfeo expressed his agony and ecstasy through exquisitely sculpted arias, as well as through recitatives that projected all the directness of natural speech. No Gluck interpreter can excel without a total commitment to eloquent delivery of the text.

Gluck fashioned the role of Orfeo for one of the greatest singers of the 18th century, the castrato Gaetano Guadagni. He had what we would consider today to be a countertenor’s range, and by all accounts he was matchlessly expressive (years before Orfeo, he earned the admiration of Handel, who revised three Messiah arias especially for him). Although Guadagni was capable of stupendous flights of vocal display, Gluck had no need to call upon the showier aspect of the singer’s artistry in Orphée et Eurydice.

The virtuosic element missing from the original version of Orfeo was brought into play when the work was substantially revised for the Paris premiere. This was thanks to the brilliance of Joseph Legros, exemplar of a vocal category highly favored in French opera at the time: the haute-contre, a lyric tenor whose voice “sits” exceptionally high. Very particular then, as now, regarding their likes and dislikes where singers were concerned, Parisian audiences frowned on castrati, who never made any headway at all in Paris, even in their heyday. Onstage tenors were the heroes, and Orphée would have been no exception. Keys were adjusted to allow for Legros to negotiate a vocal line conceived for Guadagni, and there were some marvelously effective alterations, such as the end of the great lament “J’ai perdu mon Eurydice” (“I’ve lost my Eurydice”): the stabbing beauty of the repeated high B-flats – on the word “douleur” (“pain”) – makes for a much more dramatic climax than in the aria’s original version.

At the time that Gluck was invited to write for the Académie Royale de Musique (i.e. the Opéra) in Paris, Legros had long since established himself there as one of the company’s most eminent stars. Initially Gluck was reportedly not at all pleased with his dramatic presence and vocalism, and gave Legros a good deal of grief, accusing him of screaming rather than singing. His advice: “Scream with just as much anguish as if someone were sawing through your bone. And, if you can, realize this pain inwardly, spiritually, and as if it came from the heart.” Gluck’s admonitions apparently worked – Legros triumphed as Orphée, with his achievement in the role hailed as something of a miracle.
In literature, damsels in distress have been in need of saving for years. The stories often depict a brave young man battling anything from dragons to evil witches to powerful enemies in order to save his true love. Orphée et Eurydice is no exception, with Orphée embarking on a treacherous journey to the Underworld to save his beloved wife, Eurydice. The idea of heroism certainly lives on, but now women can do the saving! Witness the Chinese heroine of Disney’s Mulan, who may have more in common with Orphée than it might seem.

For starters, Orphée and Mulan both endure loss. Orphée's true love Eurydice dies, leaving him alone. Mulan's father, Fa Zhou, is required to go to war for the Chinese emperor because he's the only male of the family. Both Orphée’s love for Eurydice and Mulan's love for her father give them the courage they need to begin their dangerous journeys.

Orphée is granted the chance to bring Eurydice back to life by guiding her out of the Underworld. To do so, he must get past the Furies. Playing his lyre, he convinces them to let him through. Once he retrieves Eurydice, he’s not allowed to look at her as he leads her back to earth. This proves even more difficult than getting past the Furies, as Eurydice is distraught over whether Orphée still loves her or not.

Similarly, Mulan has a chance to save her father’s life: she disguises herself as a man in order to take his place in the army. While she's able to pass as a man, that's only part of her journey. She now has to prove her worth by fighting against the Huns who are invading China. Her military skills prove to be initially poor, and Mulan is forced to work even harder to keep up with the men.

This brings up the next similarity: failure. Orphée succumbs to Eurydice's pleas and looks back to her, instantly killing her. After a fatal attack by the Huns, Mulan’s gender is revealed, and she’s released from the army. Luckily, both Orphée and Mulan can do the saving! Witness the Chinese heroine of Disney’s Mulan, who may have more in common with Orphée than it might seem.

Gluck, who had composed 41 operas by the time he arrived in Paris, had begun there in April 1774 with the premiere of Iphigénie en Aulide. Orphée, an even greater success, followed four months later. The Paris audience wouldn’t have considered the original version a full evening of opera (it contains about 100 minutes of music), therefore major additions were needed. Most important on the vocal side was a hair-raisingly florid new aria for Legros, “L'espoir renaît dans mon âme” (“Hope is reborn in my soul”), in which Orphée proclaims that he'll brave the terrors of Hades to find Eurydice. Gluck also gave Sophie Arnould, the prominent soprano who sang Eurydice, a ravishing entrance aria in Elysium, “Cet asile aimable et tranquille” (“This pleasant and tranquil haven”). Amour, too – created by a third major star, soprano Sophie Levasseur – was given a brief, deliciously buoyant aria sung to Orphée, “Si les doux accords de ta lyre” (“If the sweet sounds of your lyre”). In the last act Gluck also added an extended trio for the lovers and Amour.

While altering vocal lines, Gluck also created important dance episodes to please a public for whom dance in opera had always been essential. These included the thrillingly aggressive “Dance of the Furies,” as well as the dulcet “Dance of the Blessed Spirits” (probably the most celebrated purely instrumental passage in Gluck’s entire œuvre) and three dance movements for the final celebration, making a total of seven for that scene. Fittingly for Paris, Orphée ended not with a chorus, as in 1762, but with a danced Chaconne, confirming the vital role that dance now played in the work.

For decades this opera was known strictly as a vehicle for female contralto or mezzo-soprano, up to the 1980s, when countertenors began singing Orfeo. The tenor version, however, cropped up only very occasionally. Nowadays, however, we’re fortunate to have an ever-increasing number of tenors – among them Dmitry Korchak at Lyric this season – who not only sing eloquently in French, but also possess the technical prowess to sustain the extraordinarily high lines Gluck gave Legros 243 years ago. At the same time, ballet companies in major cities are full of performers who can illuminate the opera’s dance episodes. With artistry of this high level available, opera companies worldwide will surely follow Lyric’s example by more frequently presenting Gluck’s masterpiece onstage in its glorious French guise.

Roger Pines, dramaturg of Lyric Opera of Chicago, has appeared annually on the Metropolitan Opera broadcast’s “Opera Quiz” for the past decade and also contributes regularly to opera-related publications and recording companies internationally.
Can you explain the appeal of the piece itself?
It's appealing because of its unique combination of a mythical theme being realized in a very realistic, director way. I see in this a parallel to ballet itself, which in its form is highly stylized — although its instrument remains essentially the human being. But as far as I'm concerned, Orphée's essence is a very simple, direct expression of emotion.

I know you're fascinated by the history of this opera.
Yes, it's so interesting, in that it was the first attempt to create a Gesamtkunstwerk [complete work of art]. Gluck and his choreographer, librettist, and designer all came together with quite similar intentions for the premiere of the original Italian version, Orfeo ed Euridice, in 1762.

Gluck's basic purpose in Orphée was to communicate simple human emotions without hiding them in musical or vocal virtuosity. As this opera's director, I need to communicate with the audience through emotions that are recognizable — that are common to us all. We've all experienced loss — perhaps not to the point of madness, which I think is what happens in Orphée — and obviously, most of us haven't journeyed to the Underworld. Nonetheless, we're dealing with this mythical subject in realistic terms.

Can you describe your own emotional response to Gluck's music?
It's a very direct response for me — that's why I agreed to do this opera. French isn't my native language. I understand, but I don't even need the text to feel the emotion in the music. My technique of creating depends upon a spontaneous emotional reaction to music that creates in me the spark of inspiration, the spark of improvisation. I don't sit in a room and plan steps; I go to rehearsal, I put myself in a situation where there is attention and a sense of expectation. The dancers are waiting for me to do something. Although I have books and books of research regarding Orphée, I must forget everything, listen to the piano as if I've never heard this music before, and let myself move without thinking. This music gives me that opportunity.

You're placing the piece in a contemporary milieu — can you explain it?
This piece is not just a beautiful Grecian myth or a lovely Baroque opera. The love that inspired Orphée destroys him, because he just can't help it — he has to turn around! This makes me weep, because it's so true: in our lives we make such firm resolutions, and yet our weakness common to all of us makes us do such stupid things! I think that's why I'm putting it in a contemporary setting. Obviously there are sections of it that are more fantasy-like: what, for example, are these Furies, the people with snakes coming out of their heads who are blocking Orphée's way? Who are the mystical dwellers of Elysium? I'm thinking also of the presence of Amour, who in my version will always accompany Orphée. I think he, Amour, is in love with Orphée. This is why he has this idea, to take him on his imaginary journey.

What sort of impression would you like to leave the public when they see your Orphée production?
I would like them to recognize something of themselves in it. I would like them to be reminded of similar experiences — of sorrow, of anxiety, of anger, of madness, of their own human frailty.

Orphée et Eurydice:
After the Curtain Falls

When the performance is over, try discussing it with your companions and any other opera lovers you know! You can continue your pleasure in Orphée et Eurydice for hours – even days – by exchanging ideas about it. Here are some topics we can suggest:

• What about this production did you find most exciting and exhilarating?
• What finally moves the Furies to allow Orphée safe passage to the Underworld?
• Why must Orphée be tested in order to save his beloved? And what causes him to fail that test?
• Why does Amour send Orphée all this way to save Eurydice when, in the end, Amour brings her back to life anyway? Is there meaning in the quest?
• Orphée literally travels to hell and back for the love of Eurydice. Reflect on a time that you have traveled to hell and back for someone or something you loved.
• This opera incorporates substantial episodes of dance. What was the most thrilling part of the dancing and how did the music support the movement on stage?
• Of the numerous solos for Orphée, which one moved you the most? Why?

To continue enjoying Orphée et Eurydice, you can listen to or watch the following performances suggested by Lyric dramaturg Roger Pines:

Season substitute
What is your role here at Lyric, and how long have you held the position?
I am the technical finance director and I’ve been here for four and a half years. I deal with all of the financial aspects of the technical department, which include budgeting and payroll for the stage crew, scenic artists, wardrobe, and wigs/makeup staff. I also negotiate rental contracts for our productions going to other opera companies and handle the travel and scheduling logistics around that process.

What led you to work at Lyric?
I’d been working at San Francisco Opera for 18 years, and was looking to relocate. I always wanted to work at Lyric because it’s such a highly regarded company and I love Chicago. But at the time, there weren’t any positions available. So I moved back to New York State where I’m from and luckily, a year later my position became available. I applied and I’ve been here ever since!

What’s a typical day like for you?
No day is the same, but you can typically find me processing payroll, coding invoices for the business office, and having correspondence with other opera companies that are looking to rent productions from us. I also spend a lot of time mapping out the technical budget for the upcoming seasons. I consult with my colleagues in the technical department to determine what is needed for each production, which can include sets, costumes, the costs to ship productions back and forth, crew labor, and of course the costs for the lighting, sound, and scenic elements that each show requires. From there, I put together a final budget that represents the expected costs for each show, and Lyric uses that as a blueprint for our technical financial plans.

What’s the most challenging aspect of your job?
There are certain things that need to be done based on a schedule, but outside projects often compete for that time. I have to constantly find a way to keep it all organized and make sure everything flows smoothly. I figure out the time-sensitive things that need to be done, and then handle everything else that comes up along the way. Sometimes the hours are long during the season, but I’m a morning person so I like to come in and get things done before most people are awake!

What keeps you committed to the work you do?
I’ve always had an affinity for the visual and performing arts, which means I have a commitment and belief in what we do. If someone asked when I was younger what I would be doing for a career, I couldn’t have imagined I’d be working for a world-renowned arts organization like Lyric. It’s a privilege to be doing what I do.

What’s something about your job that people might not know?
Within the technical department we all share show duty, meaning someone from our department is in the audience for every Lyric performance. We watch to make sure everything looks good and runs smoothly, and it’s proven helpful to have a presence from our team there for every show. Another surprising thing is that I’m one of the co-curators for Lyric’s exhibits in the Mary B. Galvin Gallery, which is located in the lower-level Opera Club. We have one exhibit for the opera season, and sometimes a special exhibit for the musical. During My Fair Lady last season, we showcased artwork created by the employees of Lyric, which was extraordinary. It might seem odd that a finance person helps put together a gallery, but my background is in fine arts so it’s actually a perfect fit!

A favorite Lyric moment?
Watching our stage, wardrobe, and wigs crew, plus everyone backstage, accomplish what they do day in and day out to get a production onstage. The audience doesn’t always get to see what goes into creating a show, but it’s so integral to the overall enjoyment and experience at Lyric.

Beyond opera, what are your other passions?
I love photography and oil painting. In both media, I enjoy capturing still life, landscapes, and portraits. I took a break for a while, but now I’m back at it. Photography and painting are a great combination because my photographs serve as a great point of reference for my paintings!

Lyric
When Mary Selander walks into a room, feelings of warmth and familiarity immediately pass over all who are gathered. As she makes her way around, greeting each person by name, one gets a sense that this is a dance which has been rehearsed a million times before, attentively perfected. That’s the feeling of being part of the Lyric family, and that’s what Mary has built upon for more than two decades.

By the time she arrived at Lyric, Mary had already established herself as a talented fundraiser, marketer, and arts advocate, having held senior positions at the Greater Milwaukee Committee, the City of Milwaukee, and the Milwaukee Ballet, among others. Coming from a significant Milwaukee industrial family who has been giving anonymously to support education and health-related causes for four generations, perhaps it is not surprising that Mary was drawn to serve local non-profit and education institutions.

It was while she was working for Marquette University establishing the Haggerty Museum of Art that the fundraising bug bit. “Everyone was raising money to get the building built, but I realized we also needed to raise programmatic funding. I started writing grants, and I got every one of them.” Mary has maintained close ties with Marquette University to this day, serving as a Trustee since 2000.

From the Haggerty Museum she went to the Milwaukee Ballet to serve as its Executive Director, where she had the good fortune of meeting legendary choreographer John Neumeier, himself a Milwaukee native. “In 1986, a group of board members from the Milwaukee Ballet flew to Hamburg to interview John Neumeier about his world-renowned Dance Factory. Our chairman at the time owned a warehouse in the Third Ward, so the Milwaukee Ballet created its own Dance Factory in the summer of 1988. We opened the facility with the Hamburg Ballet performing John’s masterpiece, Othello. John and I have remained close friends since that project, and I am thrilled that he has returned to create Lyric’s Orphée et Eurydice.”

When Mary moved from Milwaukee to Chicago to be with her husband Larry in 1994, she knew only three people, “my husband, my mother-in-law, and revered Women’s Board member Marilee Wêhman, to whom I had been introduced by Rev. John P. Raynor, S.J., Chancellor of Marquette University.” When it came time to find a new company, Mary knew she had an opportunity to work for the Midwest’s greatest establishments. After receiving a few offers, she called Marilee for guidance. “I’ll never forget what she said to me: ‘If you don’t take the job at Lyric, I’m going to chain you to the bumper of my car and drag you there myself.’”

Starting as the director of annual gifts in 1995, Mary found herself working closely with Lyric’s leadership team, including the legendary Ardis Krainik, Lyric’s second general director. “Miss Krainik was from Manitowoc, Wisconsin, so we hit it off right away. She instilled in all of her protégés a philosophy that Lyric and its donors and subscribers are part of the family and are to be treated with the utmost customer service. This knitted so well together with my upbringing that the customer is always right, so whether a single ticket buyer or major donor, we aim to provide a consistent superior standard of excellence. This is a cornerstone of what we refer to as the ‘Lyric Way.’”

Guided by Miss Krainik’s example, Mary set forth developing lasting relationships with Lyric’s volunteer board leaders, production sponsors, and prominent Lyric supporters. She was promoted to director of development in 1999, and has served seven Board presidents, led 22 annual campaigns, three capital campaigns, and grew Lyric’s endowment from $60 million to more than $170 million. In total, she and her team have raised over three quarters of a billion dollars from 1995-2017 thanks to Lyric’s loyal donor base. “Each president of the Board of Directors has brought a unique set of skills to their leadership position in the right time and the right place, and it has been an honor to work for every one of them.”

Though she had seen only one opera when she started working at Lyric, she has become a steadfast fan of one of the greatest art forms in existence. She never passed up an opportunity to observe a rehearsal, and credits the late, great Danny Newman and Lyric dramaturg Roger Pines for coaching her along the way. “Early on, I developed a discipline of reading the program book cover to cover before every opening night which helped immensely in building my opera knowledge. It also enabled me to understand the artists’ backgrounds and introduce them to donors with which they have a common thread.”

Citing Renée Fleming and Thomas Hampson’s Thaïs as her most memorable production onstage in the Ardis Krainik Theatre, her career highlight was undoubtedly the 50th Anniversary Concert and Gala, which netted $5 million and remains Lyric’s most successful event to date.

On June 29, 2017, Mary was honored with the Carol Fox Award, Lyric’s highest honor. In his introduction of her that evening, board chairman emeritus Allan Muchin said it best: “The secret to Mary’s success was not just her ability in raising money, but it was in her developing deep and sincere relationships with the Board and all of Lyric’s donors. When Mary called, we all knew she was probably going to ask us for money, but none of us ever avoided her calls, and none of us ever turned her down as we knew she was serving our best interest, and only Mary could command that type of respect.”

As she prepares to transition to the next phase in her career, Mary is proud to have celebrated many milestones at Lyric. “Some of my proudest moments were sharing the 60th Anniversary Gala and my Carol Fox Award presentation with my whole family. I look forward to my new role as senior philanthropic advisor, and to mentoring the future super stars in the development field.” Thank you, Mary, for embodying and perpetuating the “Lyric Way.”

The Osborns have generously contributed to the Annual Campaign and the Breaking New Ground Campaign. Cathy Osborn, a valued member of Lyric’s Women’s Board, was Co-Chairman of Lyric’s highly successful Wine Auction 2009, and Chairman of Opera Ball 2013. William A. Osborn, Northern Trust’s Retired Chairman and CEO, is a leading member of Lyric’s Board of Directors and Executive Committee.

POWERSHARES QQQ

PowerShares QQQ, represented by Dan Draper, Managing Director and Head of Global ETFs, PowerShares by Invesco, is proud to sponsor the arts as a corporate partner of Lyric Opera. They previously cosponsored the productions of Cinderella and Romeo and Juliet, and they generously cosponsored Lyric’s new production of The Magic Flute last season. During the 2017/18 season, PowerShares QQQ generously cosponsors Turandot. PowerShares global network recognizes the value in helping investors around the world, but with headquarters in Downers Grove, “We also support Lyric Opera’s deep engagement with the local community to foster a rich culture of arts right here in Chicago.”

PRITZKER FOUNDATION

The Pritzker Foundation is a leading supporter of arts and education philanthropies in Chicago. Lyric Opera of Chicago is truly grateful for the Pritzker Foundation’s generous support of the Breaking New Ground Campaign to underwrite the Pritzker Family Concert Shell, designed by renowned Chicago architect Jeanne Gang and Studio Gang architects. Lyric Opera is honored to have Life Member Mrs. Jay A. Pritzker and M. K. Pritzker serve on its esteemed Women’s Board.

J. CHRISTOPHER and ANNE N. REYES

Anne and Chris Reyes are prominent members of the Lyric family. A past President of Lyric’s Women’s Board, Anne was recently elected to serve on Lyric’s Board of Directors, Executive and Lyric Unlimited Committees; Chris is also a valued member of the Board of Directors, and serves on its Nominating/Governance and Finance Committees. Together they have made important contributions to Lyric as cosponsors of several mainstage productions, including this season’s Jesus Christ Superstar. They have staunchly supported the Wine Auction and are major supporters of the Annual Campaign, Breaking New Ground Campaign, and Lyric Unlimited.
LOYD E. RIGLER-LAWRENCE E. DEUTSCH FOUNDATION
A graduate of the University of Illinois and life-long arts philanthropist Lloyd E. Rigler established the Lloyd E. Rigler-Lawrence E. Deutsch Foundation in 1977 in memory of his partner to provide major support to arts organizations in Los Angeles and nationwide. In 1994, the late Mr. Rigler established the Classic Arts Showcase in an effort to provide free arts programming to those who could not afford to attend live performances. Mr. Rigler’s nephew James Rigler now serves as President of the Foundation and continues the important legacy established by his late uncle. As Lyric strives to expand its reach and relevance, it is grateful to the Rigler-Deutsch Foundation for its support of the annual Operathon broadcast on 98.7WFMT. The Rigler-Deutsch Foundation also generously cosponsored Lyric’s company premiere of Les Troyens last season and is cosponsoring Die Walküre this season.

PATRICK G. RYAN and SHIRLEY WELSH RYAN
Lyric cherishes the enduring friendship and dedication of Patrick G. and Shirley Welsh Ryan. Since 1966 when they first subscribed to Lyric as newlyweds, they have shared their leadership, talents, vision, and resources to advance Lyric’s mission. Over the past four decades, the Ryans have contributed generously to the Annual Campaign, Wine Auctions (which Mrs. Ryan initiated in 1988), and the Breaking New Ground Campaign in support of the Innovation Initiative. In recognition of his leadership role in the Building on Greatness Capital Campaign, Pat Ryan was a recipient of the 1994 Carol Fox Award. For many seasons, they have sponsored Lyric Opera Commentaries, underwriting this special project to honor the memory of their parents. The Ryans are sponsors of the Renée Fleming Initiative and Lyric’s premier artist development program was renamed The Patrick G. and Shirley W. Ryan Opera Center in recognition of their extraordinary gift to the Campaign for Excellence. Pat and Shirley serve as Honorary Co-Chairs of the Ryan Opera Center Board. A Vice President and a member of the Executive, Nominating/Governance, and Innovation Committees of Lyric’s Board of Directors and a distinguished former President of the Women’s Board, Shirley Welsh Ryan was awarded the 2008 Carol Fox Award, Lyric’s most prestigious honor, in recognition of her many years of devoted service to the company.

RICHARD O. RYAN
A passionate supporter of The Patrick G. and Shirley W. Ryan Opera Center, Lyric’s premier artist development program, Richard cosponsors Ryan Opera Center soprano Ann Toomey. An ardent opera lover, Richard has been a Lyric subscriber for more than 45 years. He recently made a generous leadership commitment to Lyric’s Breaking New Ground Campaign for the stage improvement project. Richard proudly serves as a member of the Ryan Opera Center Board, and was formerly a Guild Board member. Lyric is grateful for the munificent support of Richard Ryan.

DR. SCHOLL FOUNDATION
Since 1983, the Dr. Scholl Foundation’s commitment to children, families and educational enrichment through the arts has led it to provide essential support for one of Lyric’s most popular cultural engagement opportunities available to young Chicagans, the Student Matinees. Each year, these widely accessible performances at Lyric Opera of Chicago reach audiences of junior high and high school students, many of whom are experiencing opera for the first time. Lyric Opera is deeply grateful to the Dr. Scholl Foundation for its generous ongoing support of Student Matinees/Performances for Students, commemorating Catherine A. and Jack E. Scholl, who championed cultural and institutional education.

EARL and BRENDA SHAPIRO FOUNDATION
Prominent members of the Lyric family for many seasons, Brenda Shapiro and her late husband Earl provided vital support to the Annual Campaign and the Breaking New Ground Campaign. The Foundation has cosponsored several mainstage productions, most recently last season’s presentation of Norma. Lyric is honored to have Brenda Shapiro serve on the Board of Directors as well as the Executive, Production Sponsorship, and Lyric Unlimited Committees.

WILLIAM and ARLENE STALEY
Loyal subscribers for more than four decades, Bill and Orli Staley have contributed to the Annual Campaign as well as provided vital support for the Ryan Opera Center. Recently, they have enabled hundreds of students to see mainstage Lyric productions by supporting Lyric Unlimited’s Performances for Students initiative. Lyric is honored to have Orli Staley serve as a life member of the Ryan Opera Center Board. The Staleys join the production sponsor family this season with their generous cosponsorship of Lyric’s new production of Orphée et Eurydice.

LIZ STIFFEL
A passionate devotee of opera and loyal subscriber at Lyric, Liz is a prominent member of Lyric’s Women’s Board and a longstanding member of the Guild Board of Directors. She has cosponsored several mainstage productions, most recently Carousel (2014/15), Das Rheingold and My Fair Lady (both 2016/17), and this season’s new production of Orphée et Eurydice. Lyric has named Mezzanine Box 1 in recognition of her significant gift to the Breaking New Ground Campaign. Liz Stiffel was awarded the 2017 Carol Fox Award, Lyric’s most prestigious honor, in recognition of her continuing dedication to Lyric. “I believe that Lyric and all art forms are beacons of light that shine as examples of the best that mankind has to offer to our children, our nation, and ourselves.”

MRS. HERBERT A. VANCE and MR. AND MRS. WILLIAM C. VANCE
Lyric Opera appreciates the extraordinary generosity and leadership of the Vance Family. The Vances have generously sponsored/cosponsored several Lyric premières and new productions, most recently last season’s My Fair Lady. For many years, the Vances have supported emerging singers through their sponsorship of Ryan Opera Center Ensemble members. In addition, Mr. and Mrs. William C. Vance contributed to the Breaking New Ground Campaign, and are generous sponsors of the Renée Fleming Initiative. Mr. Vance is Vice President and an esteemed member of Lyric’s Board of Directors and Executive Committee. He also serves as a life member of the Ryan Opera Center Board, of which he is a past President. Bill Vance was awarded the 2016 Carol Fox Award, Lyric’s most prestigious honor, in recognition of his leadership, steadfast support, and many years of devoted service to Lyric Opera.
DONNA VAN EEKEREN FOUNDATION
Donna Van Eekeren is a devoted opera fan, Lyric subscriber, and generous supporter of the Ryan Opera Center. She enjoys encouraging talented young artists as Lead Sponsor of Rising Stars in Concert and Exclusive Sponsor of its radio rebroadcast on 98.7WFMT. Reflecting her passion for introducing young people to opera, the Donna Van Eekeren Foundation has supported Lyric’s Performances for Students, NEXT discount tickets for college students, and Opera in the Neighborhoods. The Donna Van Eekeren Foundation has cosponsored several mainstage productions including Lyric’s premiere of Les Troyens (2016/17) and this season’s production of I Puritani. Donna also made a leadership gift to the Breaking New Ground Campaign to help secure Lyric’s future. Executive Chairman of Land O’Frost, Donna Van Eekeren is a valued member of Lyric’s Board of Directors, serving as Secretary of the Board, on the Executive and Finance Committees, and on the Ryan Opera Center Board.

THE WALLACE FOUNDATION
The Wallace Foundation is a national philanthropy that seeks to improve learning and enrichment for disadvantaged children and foster the vitality of the arts for everyone. Wallace has an unusual approach: funding projects to test innovative ideas for solving important social problems, conducting research to find out what works and what doesn’t and to fill key knowledge gaps – and then communicating the results to help others. Lyric Opera is the recipient of a multi-phase grant as part of the Foundation’s Building Audiences for Sustainability initiative; the grant is funding research and analysis of Lyric Opera audiences, and will reveal ways in which Lyric can maximize its reach in the community. Lyric’s work will inform lessons that will be shared with the broader field.

ROBERTA L. and ROBERT J. WASHLOW
Roberta and Bob Washlow are cherished members of the Lyric family. For more than four decades, they have enjoyed attending Lyric performances and special events, and have generously supported the Annual Campaign. Since 1986, the Port, Washlow, and Errant Families together sponsored more than 20 Lyric productions. The Washlows made a generous commitment to the Breaking New Ground Campaign to support Lyric Unlimited activities. Roberta and Bob have annually remained valued members of the production sponsorship family, and generously cosponsor this season’s production of Rigoletto, their tenth opera cosponsorship, continuing a beloved family tradition. Lyric is honored to have Roberta Washlow as an esteemed member of its Board of Directors and Lyric Unlimited Committee. “Opera has always touched me,” Roberta once said. “I love the drama, passion, music, and excitement of a live performance at Lyric. Nothing can replace it, and I hope this beautiful art form will continue for generations.”

HELEN and SAM ZELL
Helen and Sam Zell are passionate supporters of Chicago’s vibrant cultural scene. They are longtime subscribers to Lyric Opera and have contributed to the Annual Campaign for many years. Helen and Sam have cosponsored several new productions, most recently the first two installments of Lyric’s new Ring cycle, Das Rheingold (2016/17) and this season’s Die Walküre.
The Breaking New Ground Campaign was launched in January 2013 to implement the company's blueprint for a world-class, twenty-first century opera company. This Campaign allows Lyric to continue to produce major productions of the highest caliber, update media, marketing, and audience development programs, and fortify Lyric's endowment. The current focus of the Campaign is to modernize the stage of the Ardis Krainik Theatre with state-of-the-art equipment.

To that end, we have established a new Insull Society comprised of loyal patrons who are contributing $10,000 or more for this critically important stage project. To join the Insull Society, please call 312.827.5675.

Lyric Opera is grateful to the following donors who have made contributions of $5,000 and above to the Campaign as of July 1, 2017.

Eurydice/Orphée et Eurydice
I have a plethora of fond memories of my time in the Ryan Opera Center. Singing Valencienne in The Merry Widow (2009/10, pictured) in my third year was a particularly defining moment for me. I knew I’d been given an incredible opportunity to sing a leading role, and I needed to make the most of it. Singing (and dancing!) my way through the rehearsals and performances was exhilarating, and brought me to the realization that I was ready to leave my Ryan Opera Center “nest” and embark on what I hoped to be an exciting career. I’m incredibly fortunate to have had this space to thrive as a singer and artist, guided and nurtured by world-class coaches and teachers. Being directly tied to one of the world’s top opera companies allowed me to observe and learn from major stars, either as their understudies or performing alongside them. I also forged some lifelong friendships. I’m filled with gratitude to the Ryan Opera Center and to its generous donors who support young, up-and-coming artists and make it possible for such an extraordinary place to exist.
