Lyric
From the General Director

Opera thrills us to our depths not simply through great music and great theater, but through the brilliance with which those elements reveal the truth of human emotion. The greatest opera composers aren’t simply peerless musicians – they’re also brilliant psychologists who bring us the hearts and souls of their characters with unique, astounding insight. In the entire history of opera, no composer merits this description more than Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart, especially in his Cosi fan tutte.

A great Cosi performance gives an audience satisfaction of a very rare kind, since the challenges are so overwhelming. The piece requires, first of all, true singing actors – an ensemble of six star performers, all of them superbly accomplished musically and vocally. Mozart has given them many opportunities to make their presence felt in solo passages (for example, there’s nothing more moving in the Mozart operas than Ferrando’s love song in Act One or Fiordiligi’s private examination of her feelings in Act Two). Thanks to Mozart and his librettist, Lorenzo da Ponte, each of these six individuals onstage undertakes an emotional journey in the course of the opera, in which each of the five other characters plays a significant role. These are all intensely human figures, very specifically defined: dignified Fiordiligi and flighty Dorabella, lovestruck Ferrando and exuberant Guglielmo, earthy Despina and world-weary Don Alfonso. The miracle of the opera is the musically and dramatically enthralling interplay among them.

The great question applied to any Cosi production is how the director chooses to treat the ending: will the young women return to their fiancés, or will they go off with their new partners? The answer to that question is something I always look forward to, and of course, I won’t reveal here the direction we’ll take for this finale at Lyric! The suspense will make that moment all the more rewarding for everyone in the audience.

Fiordiligi in Cosi, one of Mozart’s most exacting soprano roles, has been closely associated with Lyric favorite Ana María Martínez throughout her career, and I’m thrilled that she can now bring this much-acclaimed portrayal to Lyric. I anticipate a captivating stage partnership between Ana María and Marianne Crebassa (Dorabella), who so delighted Lyric audiences in Romeo and Juliet two seasons ago. The same can be said of the dashing pair portraying their fiancés, Joshua Hopkins (Guglielmo) and Andrew Stenson (Ferrando), and of the opera’s two schemers: Elena Tsallagova (Despina) in her Lyric debut and Alessandro Corbelli (Don Alfonso), whose mastery of comic repertoire we’ve been privileged to witness frequently at Lyric over the past three decades.

It’s always a joy for us to introduce an outstanding young American conductor to Lyric audiences. James Gaffigan, still less than a decade into his international career and already praised for his Mozart at Glyndebourne and the Vienna State Opera, is making an indelible impression with other major opera companies and orchestras worldwide. At Lyric he’s collaborating with the gifted Bruno Ravella, who is reviving John Cox’s marvelous production. John’s extraordinarily perceptive response to both the humor and the sheer humanity of the Mozart/da Ponte operas has produced innumerable glorious performances of this repertoire at every leading house internationally, including our previous Cosi revival in 2006/07.

Refresh your spirits and enrich your hearts with Cosi fan tutte, one of the true masterpieces of opera.

From the Chairman

On behalf of the Board of Directors, I’m delighted to welcome you to Lyric Opera of Chicago.

This season has been a particularly varied and distinctive one. Prior to the captivating presentation of Mozart’s Così fan tutte that you’re enjoying tonight, our audiences thrilled to Gluck’s exquisite Orphée et Eurydice in John Neumeier’s historic new production; a powerfully dramatic revival of Verdi’s Rigoletto; the second installment of Lyric’s monumental new production of Wagner’s Ring cycle with Die Walküre; Bizet’s ravishing The Pearl Fishers; Puccini’s formidable Turandot; and Bellini’s glorious I puritani. I hope you’ll return for the final opera of the mainstage season, Gounod’s matchlessly romantic Faust.

Speaking personally, one of the most rewarding aspects of Lyric – not only as chairman, but as a longtime subscriber and patron – is my joy in introducing family, friends, and business colleagues to the company and the art form. I hope you’ll consider doing the same! When I receive out-of-town visitors during the opera season, I always try to include an evening at Lyric. It’s inevitably a major highlight of their stay.

A Lyric performance isn’t only an opportunity to dress up and go out with your significant other or with close friends for an elegant evening – it’s also an unforgettable and rewarding experience of timeless stories set to some of the world’s greatest music and performed by many of the top artists of our day.

Lyric’s mainstage productions are, of course, the core of every season we present. I also encourage you to explore the unique activities of Lyric Unlimited, our initiative focused on community engagement and education. It is one of the ways that the company stays relevant as a cultural service provider to all of Chicago, whether with newly commissioned works, community-created performances or the special programs presented in dozens of public schools all over Chicago every year. The level of creativity at work in Lyric Unlimited presentations has been truly inspiring, and it has exposed the art form of opera to tens of thousands of students across Chicagoland.

By presenting opera in new and non-traditional ways, Lyric Unlimited helps to grow and expand our audiences. I invite you to join me at one of the Lyric Unlimited performances of Fellow Travelers in March or Family Day at Lyric on April 7.

At Lyric, we truly cherish our donors and patrons. We consider each one of you as members of the Lyric family. It can sometimes be trite to declare, “Every gift counts,” but at Lyric it’s true: you’re going above and beyond what you’re paying for the ticket price. You’re investing in Lyric, entrusting that we will turn your gift into great art. We take that responsibility very seriously and are constantly imagining new ways to enhance your personal experience at Lyric, build new audiences for opera, and do it all in the most cost-effective way we can.

Many thanks to all of you who play a vital role in ensuring that our great art form and our great company continue to serve Chicago and the world of opera today and in the years to come.

March 17 - March 16, 2018
Costumed and coiffed performers sing and act compellingly onstage at the Lyric Opera House -- at least until the director’s booming voice on the “god mic” requests a do-over. Some time later, a minor technical malfunction prompts a halt. The stage manager comes out in a headset mic to confer with the maestro, director, assistant director, and assorted others who emerge from the wings to solve the problem while the performers onstage and the lone pianist in the orchestra pit cool their heels. And so it goes for five long hours, albeit with intermittent breaks.

What is going on here?

The nearly-ready-for-prime-time piano dress rehearsal, a.k.a. the piano run-through (PRT). It’s a bit like seeing a painter’s cartoon; you get the idea, but it’s a long way from the completed canvas.

In opera, the final dress rehearsal is essentially a preview performance for an audience of company and board members, sponsors, and invited guests. Everything and everyone is in virtually finished form, except that the orchestra and conductor skip the formal attire they’ll wear for performances.

The PRT less than a week earlier is something else entirely — the very first time everyone onstage wears full costume/wigs/makeup while singing and moving about the stage. It’s the very first time the creative team and backstage staff can assess whether everything looks and works as intended. Do costumes or makeup need adjusting? Did someone just slip on that step? Why is the light focused on the table and not on the soprano? Dozens of eyes in the theater and in the wings track every detail onstage to catch and correct potential problems.
Adam Plachetka/Papageno lost his longjohns and Diana Newman/Papagena gained some decorative midriff lures between the PRT (top) and final dress rehearsal (bottom) of The Magic Flute.

Work in progress, down to the wire: members of Die Walküre’s creative team, stage managers, and stagehands on the set.
A PRT proceeds in fits and starts. Scattered Lyric staff from the top on down watch the proceedings in a state of high alert, scribbling endless notes and calculating what it’ll take to get the show ready for the final dress rehearsal and opening performance.

A few seasons back, Marina Rebeka’s tsunami of petticoats inadvertently swept up a chair and dragged it across the stage during La traviata’s PRT. The soprano recalls, “The dress I wore for Flora’s ball was so huge that they had to redo it several times, calculating how heavy it was, so that it wouldn’t drag me to the floor!” When Violetta faints after Alfredo insults her, Rebeka worried she wouldn’t be able to get back to her feet while managing the massive gown, which weighed “around 8kg.” Adjustments ensured no artists (or set elements) were harmed in the dress rehearsal and performances.

An artist’s schedule may necessitate arriving late in the month-long rehearsal process — sometimes just before the PRT. Lyric’s recent Calaf, Stefano La Colla, wrapped up performances of Nabucco at La Scala on November 19, arrived in Chicago Thanksgiving week, and jumped in the metaphorical deep end with the Turandot PRT on Nov. 27. Annotated score in hand, assistant director David Toulson guided the tenor through the staging, paving the way for a smooth dress rehearsal and successful U.S. debut.

For last season’s Les Troyens, a late cast change brought mezzo-soprano Susan Graham to town for Lyric’s brand-new production and company premiere of Berlioz’s epic opera. Graham had portrayed Dido previously in Paris, New York, and San Francisco, but had to learn her way around the new set in costume for the first time during the PRT. “I have absolutely no recollection of it, since I was thrown into it basically a day before!” Graham recounts. “I was just trying to put one foot in front of the other, which is probably why Tim was up there so much, helping me learn the staging at the eleventh hour.” That would be director Tim Albery, who barely left the stage during the marathon rehearsal.

In this season’s new production of Die Walküre, concerns about the stability of Hunding’s table — upon which Brandon Jovanovich (Siegmund) leapt at a full run — caused a brief halt to the first PRT’s first act. (Extra-long operas, and sometimes new productions, get two PRTs.) Director David Pountney, associate director Rob Kearley, and assistant director Katrina Bachus joined stage manager John Coleman onstage to assess the situation. Technicians checked the hidden mechanism to ensure Elisabet Strid (Sieglinde) would be able to firmly secure the table after rolling it into position. The leap provoked astonished gasps at every performance as the lanky tenor sang passionately while making his boundingly smooth move.

Jovanovich recalls the PRT’s “table incident. Elisabet had only a few moments to push it into place and then depress a ‘knob’ on one of the drawers that activated an air release system used to lower and raise the table. She hadn’t depressed it fully. The second issue was with placement, as the location of the table was once too far stage right and the ‘field of love’ pasture couldn’t move because the pulley system was inhibited by the table. Then the table was too far stage left the next time and I could barely reach over to pull out the sword. Both of these were resolved and never bothered us again.”

The vagaries of stage fog reveal themselves during PRTs. Jovanovich remembers that in Lyric’s new production of Rusalka, “when Ana María [Martínez] appeared in Act Three at the pond, the first PRT had so much fog onstage that I wouldn’t have been able to see a car with headlights. She was back there somewhere, but we needed to find a balance between ‘mood’ fog and ‘functional’ fog.” With prompt technical tweaks, the principals could see each other, and be seen by the audience.

Performers, the creative team, and Lyric staff may have a general sense of what a production’s sets and costumes look like, “but sometimes you don’t know what the effect is until the PRT,” says Elise Sandell, a frequent assistant director for Lyric productions. The chorus members “always get so excited, seeing each other in costumes for the first time. They take a lot of selfies. It adds a level of fun to PRTs. It’s a challenge — either you wear the costume or the costume wears you! The chorus members have to assimilate the costumes in a very short time; they’re in full costume only for the PRT and for the final dress rehearsal” before the performances commence. For the stage-orchestra rehearsals in between, the soloists wear costumes, while the chorus members are in street clothes.

The assistant director sits with the production director and designers at the tech table in the middle of the main-floor seating area during the PRT, shuttling back and forth to the stage as needed. Sandell gets through PRTs with “LaraBars and trail mix, and you have to hydrate. The most important thing for keeping calm is lots of deep breaths. It’s easy for everyone’s fuses to get short. I’ve learned from working at Lyric that how I see a challenge, how I meet it, and how I choose to talk about it can either make everyone’s day better or worse. I try to keep my attitude optimistic and realistic. You have to crawl before you can walk, and walk before you can run. A PRT is crawling, with a little standing and walking, so that you can run by dress rehearsal.”

PRTs for revivals of productions previously staged at Lyric and elsewhere are generally easier than for new productions, Sandell observes. “Someone’s worn that costume before, and there are notes. With all the hoop skirts in Eugene Onegin, Act Two, director Paula Suozzi could tell people which ring of the skirt to pick up. With a revival you know where the problems are and solve them before they crop up.” New productions can match first-time parenthood for anxious anticipation, but the payoff is worth it: Sir David McVicar’s production of Elektra, once everything came together, “was jaw-dropping and so much fun,” Sandell recalls.

During a PRT “you have to manage everybody’s time,” she continues. “I make a schedule with the stage manager, who is the king when the show is onstage — it’s as much the stage manager’s rehearsal during the PRT as the director’s.” Each production presents its own special challenges. “For My Fair Lady there were 350 costumes on about 80 people — so many costume changes, eight different scenes in the show, all the moving scenery which has to be lit in different positions with different timings and different effects — with dancing added in,” Sandell recounts. “For the world premiere of Bel Canto, almost everybody was onstage the whole time, which made it logistically impossible to tech. A PRT is the day everybody works the hardest, the full gamut of every department that touches the onstage product — dressers, props crew, stage managers, singers, music staff.”

Eric Weimer of Lyric’s music staff notes that a PRT is the first time to hear the offstage musicians that many operatic scores require. “Do they need to sound like they’re in the next room or the next county?” he quips. Those musicians’ audibility is affected by set design and location. “Those of us who are pianists have a romantic notion of the PRT — it’s our chance to play, and as close as we get to public performance. In our minds it’s a big thing!” On the other hand, Weimer realizes, for nearly everyone else the PRT “is not about the music. A lot of the singers aren’t singing out. They’re more concerned with ‘What do I do with my train?’ ‘My gown doesn’t fit!’ ‘What do I do with my sword?’ — the details of the production.”

Lyric
Longtime Lyric dresser John Salyers remembers that in Das Rheingold, Wotan and Alberich’s shocking fight for the ring went back to the drawing board after the PRT. “The director and designer wanted lots of blood when Alberich’s arm was ripped off, so we had to figure out how to accomplish that in a simple way and also make sure that the arm would come off easily, yet not fall off unintentionally before the effect was to happen. After a huge effort to get it to work, it was decided with the color of the stage floor the audience wouldn’t see the blood, so that aspect was removed and we then focused on just making sure the arm would come off when it was supposed to.”

Rachel Henneberry, both a stage manager and assistant stage manager (ASM) at Lyric, remembers that for My Fair Lady she was stage-right ASM “in charge of wardrobe paperwork — entrances, exits, how much time for each change, working out where and how to do changes [with wardrobe director Maureen Reilly] for everyone in the show — principals, supernumeraries, chorus, dancers. The most complicated change was going from Ascot to Ball, where literally everyone but Donald Maxwell [as Alfred Doolittle] and Bryce Pinkham [as Freddy Eynsford-Hill] had to change. The majority had nine minutes for a complete change, including tiaras and other accessories. Some had less than four minutes. You have an army of crew who literally help cast members dress as quickly as they can, to motivate wig changes, adding tiaras, and keeping people on focus so they can get right back onstage.

“In doing that change for the first time during the PRT, you realize you can do certain things to make the change go faster, like having ten women go to have their tiaras put on first, then add their dresses — that’s being more efficient. The dressers aren’t bombarded by 21 women at once — they get 10 and the wig-make up crew get 11, and then they swap.”

Richard E. Grant’s PJs also needed work, Henneberry recalls. As Henry Higgins, “he changed from pajamas to a linen suit just offstage of the doorway in Act Two. I was behind the wall with him, his dresser John Salyers, and props assistant Mike Berger with shoehorn and toothbrush. My job was to make sure they all did the right things at the right time, and that they gave Mr. Grant his cue lines in a stage whisper, a helpful reminder while he was dressing. During the PRT he was fumbling with the buttons on his pajamas,” so they were switched to Velcro. “It looked buttoned, but we could rip it apart offstage.”

For Eugene Onegin, Henneberry oversaw props paperwork. “That was a very props-heavy show, with lots of chairs, apples being peeled, bread, tables, leaves laid out by the props staff for the opening scene.” Because it was a revival, there were existing photos and notes about the pre-sets and special handoffs, “like a tea-tray an artist needed to have put in hand by a props person. Much invisible teamwork goes on. You fine-tune during the PRT; you’re onstage under show conditions for the first time — you’ve got to work it out on the spot.” PRTs can be “like wrangling a preschool class. You know who’s walking in the door but you don't know what’s going to happen. Then you punt, figure it out, and fly.”

ACT ONE
Don Alfonso is trying to enlighten Ferrando and Guglielmo as to the true nature of women. He places a bet that he can prove their fiancées, Fiordiligi and Dorabella, are not the icons of purity the men believe them to be. Both sides are confident of victory within twenty-four hours.

Sisters Fiordiligi and Dorabella are celebrating the perfection of their lovers. Don Alfonso arrives and tells them that their men have been called up and must leave immediately for the battlefront. The men enact a farewell scene and “go off to war.” The women are devastated, but the maid Despina tells them to look on the bright side and have a good time in their absence — in other words, behave exactly as men would.

Don Alfonso and Despina work together to this end. Don Alfonso introduces two Albanian friends whom Despina in turn introduces to the sisters. None of the three women penetrate the disguises of Ferrando and Guglielmo. Fiordiligi and Dorabella are offended to see the strange men and repelled by their advances. They declare fidelity to their lovers. The young men are delighted, but Don Alfonso is quite relaxed.

The sisters continue to grieve. The two rejected strangers return to them, swallow “poison” and collapse. The terrified girls call for Despina, who goes with Don Alfonso to find a doctor. Fiordiligi and Dorabella try to help the “dying” strangers. Don Alfonso returns with Despina disguised as a doctor who claims to cure everything by magnetism. The men revive, and believing they are in heaven, demand a kiss from their “angels” Fiordiligi and Dorabella. The sisters manage to resist again.

ACT TWO
Despina persuades the sisters to befriend their new admirers. They decide on preferences — Dorabella chooses Guglielmo; Fiordiligi, Ferrando. Each has instinctively chosen the other’s partner. Don Alfonso and Despina cement the new love affairs in the context of a masquerade. The couples pair up and Dorabella yields to Guglielmo. Fiordiligi rejects Ferrando, for the time being.

Ferrando and Guglielmo exchange notes on their progress. Ferrando is furious, and Guglielmo is triumphant but brutally dismissive of the fallen Dorabella.

Despina and Dorabella put pressure on Fiordiligi. Fiordiligi decides she must run away to join Guglielmo at war, but Ferrando confronts her again and she too yields. Agonized, Guglielmo witnesses it all. Don Alfonso has proven his point and won the bet.

Don Alfonso and Despina arrange for the new couples to be “married” by Despina disguised as a notary. As the girls sign their names, a military band is heard. Apparently the soldiers have returned unexpectedly. In the confusion, the two men disappear, re-emerging without their disguises. Shocked at the evidence of a wedding they swear vengeance on their rivals.

The plot is revealed. All four lovers’ certainties have been destroyed. No one quite knows what to feel, except that certainly human nature has been at work.

U. S. debut
Performing an exceptionally diverse repertoire, the Puerto Rican-born soprano is internationally recognized as one of today’s most remarkable artists. Highlights of the current season include reproses of Carmen (LA Opera), Rusalka (Teatro Colón – Buenos Aires), and Alice Ford/ Falstaff (Covent Garden). Martínez’s roles extend stylistically from Mozart’s Fiordiligi (Salzburg, Ravinia, DVD), Countess Almaviva (Houston, Munich), and Pamina (San Francisco, Vienna, Bonn, Stuttgart) to Rossini’s Rosina (Houston, Santa Fe); Donizetti’s Paolina/Poliuto (Glyndebourne, DVD); Verdi’s Violetta (Covent Garden, Los Angeles), Luisa Miller (Paris, Berlin) and Amelia Grimaldi (Paris, Los Angeles, San Francisco); Puccini’s Mimi (Paris, Berlin, Dresden, Santa Fe, San Juan), Butterfly (a recent triumph at the Met and Covent Garden, also Vienna, Houston, Washington, Munich) and Liù (Amsterdam); and French heroines including Carmen (Houston, Santa Fe), Antonia (Paris), Micaëla (Metropolitan Opera), Mélisande (Florence), and Blanche (Hamburg). Last season Martínez returned to Mozart’s Donna Elvira in San Francisco. The soprano has appeared with many major orchestras, including those of Milan (La Scala), Berlin, Moscow, New York, and Boston. Last summer she joined frequent concert partner Plácido Domingo for a zarruela gala at the Arena di Verona. Highlights of Martínez’s varied discography include Manon Lescaut, Pagliacci, and a recital of arias and songs.

The French mezzo-soprano, who scored a great success previously as Dorabella at the Opéra Municipal de Marseille, will be heard this season as Irene/Handel’s Tamerlano (La Scala), Sesto/La clemenza di Tito (Opéra National de Paris), and Mélisande/Pelléas et Mélisande (Berlin State Opera). At just 21, while studying musicology, voice, and piano in Montpellier, Crebassa was engaged by that city’s opera company for Schumann’s Manfred. She returns annually to Montpellier’s Opéra and Festival de Radio France, where most recently she sang the title role/Offenbach’s Fantasio. Following her success as Isabella/Wuthering Heights in 2010, Crebassa was engaged by the Opéra National de Paris’s Atelier Lyrique two-year program, appearing as Gluck’s Orphée and Ramiro/Le finta giardiniera, as well as on the Opéra’s mainstage in Lulu, Rigoletto, and Madama Butterfly. She debuted at the Salzburg Festival as Handel’s Irene and returned as Cecilio/Lucio Silla, the title role of Marc André Dalbavie’s Charlotte Salomon (world premiere) and Sesto/La demenza di Tito. Further appearances have included Cherubino/The Marriage of Figaro (Berlin State Opera, debut), Cecilio/Lucio Silla (La Scala, debut), and Siébel/Faust (Dutch National Opera). Last year the mezzo-soprano’s first solo disc, Oh, Boy!, a recital of arias for trouser roles, received the prestigious 2017 Echo Klassik Award for Solo Recording (Voice). Her new disc, Secrets, has just been released.

Alessandro Corbelli
(Don Alfonso)
Previously at Lyric:
Seven roles since 1986/87, most recently Don Magnifico/Cinderella (2015/16); Bartolo/ The Barber of Seville (2013/14); Dr. Dulcamara/ L’elisir d’amore (2009/10).

Long celebrated worldwide for the Mozart, Rossini, and Donizetti comic repertoire, this season the Italian baritone will reprise his definitive portrayals of Don Geronio/ Il turco in Italia (Amsterdam’s National Opera), the title role/ Don Pasquale (Vienna State Opera), and Taddeo/ L’italiana in Algeri (Salzburg Festival, opposite Cecilia Bartoli). Corbelli’s pre-eminence in Rossini comedies has included recent performances as Magnifico with the Munich, Metropolitan, Vienna, and LA opera companies. The Turin-born artist is also his generation’s most acclaimed interpreter of Bartolo/ The Barber of Seville (most recently Glyndebourne, Lyric, Covent Garden, and the major houses of Palermo, Toulouse, and Los Angeles), Dulcamara/ L’elisir d’amore (Lyric, Met, Madrid, Leipzig, Barcelona, San Francisco, Houston, among other houses), Sulpice/ La fille du régime (Covent Garden, Paris, Met), and Don Pasquale (the recent Glyndebourne production mounted especially for him is available on DVD). Also renowned as Don Alfonso (Vienna), Falstaff (Toulouse, Glyndebourne), and Gianni Schicchi and LA opera companies. The Turin-born artist is also his generation’s most acclaimed interpreter of Bartolo/ The Barber of Seville (most recently Glyndebourne, Lyric, Covent Garden, and the major houses of Palermo, Toulouse, and Los Angeles), Dulcamara/ L’elisir d’amore (Lyric, Met, Madrid, Leipzig, Barcelona, San Francisco, Houston, among other houses), Sulpice/ La fille du régime (Covent Garden, Paris, Met), and Don Pasquale (the recent Glyndebourne production mounted especially for him is available on DVD). Also renowned as Don Alfonso (Vienna), Falstaff (Toulouse, Glyndebourne), and Gianni Schicchi (Met, Turin, Glyndebourne), Corbelli has triumphed in sterner roles such as Sharpless/ Madame Butterfly (Torre del Lago) and, at Covent Garden, both Michonnet/ Adriana Lecouvreur and the Marquis/ Linda di Chamounix. The baritone’s close association with Covent Garden includes nearly 100 performances since his 1988 debut as Rossini’s Taddeo. Corbelli appears in 20 roles on CD and eight on DVD.

Lyric

Currently chief conductor of the Luzerner Sinfonieorchester, Gaffigan is also principal guest conductor of the Netherlands Radio Philharmonic. He has earned acclaim for guest engagements with the London, Dresden, Czech, and Rotterdam Philharmonic Orchestras; the Vienna Symphony, Dresden Staatskapelle, Deutsches Symphonie-Orchester Berlin, Zurich Tonhalle, City of Birmingham Symphony Orchestra, Orchestra of the Age of Enlightenment, and Orchestre de Paris; and the leading orchestras of Leipzig, Berlin, and Stuttgart Radio Orchestras; and the leading orchestras of Philadelphia, St. Louis, Los Angeles, and Washington, among others. Highlights this season include his Santa Fe Opera debut (Ariadne auf Naxos), his return to the Vienna State Opera (La traviata), and appearances with many major orchestras worldwide, including the Chicago Symphony Orchestra. A former first-prize winner in the Sir Georg Solti International Conducting Competition, Gaffigan was also a conducting fellow at the Solti International Conducting Competition, and assistant in the Aspen Festival’s American Academy of Conducting, associate conductor of the San Francisco Symphony, and assistant conductor of the Cleveland Orchestra.

The internationally celebrated director began his professional career in opera at Glyndebourne in 1959. The next ten years he divided among directing plays, opera, and television before spending a decade as Glyndebourne’s director of productions. His own work there included operas of Mozart, Rossini and Haydn, Stravinsky’s The Rake’s Progress with David Hockney’s designs, and six Strauss comedies. Cox is former general administrator and artistic director of Scottish Opera (productions included the first U. K. staging of the complete Lulu) and former principal stage director at the Royal Opera (Guillaume Tell, Capriccio, Il viaggio a Reims, Eugene Onegin, Die Frau ohne Schatten). Freelance work includes houses as large as La Scala and the Met, and as small as Drottningholm and the Opéra de Monte Carlo; in places as far apart as Tehran and Honolulu; in standard repertoire (La traviata, Salzburg) and in rarities (Pizzetti’s Murder in the Cathedral, Turin; Barber’s Vanessa, Strasbourg, Los Angeles). Cox has enjoyed longstanding relationships with Monte Carlo, San Francisco, and Sydney, and most recently with Garsington Opera. In addition to this season’s Thais (Met), recent productions include a Rake’s Progress revival (Glyndebourne), Ariadne auf Naxos and Otello (Houston), Capriccio (Opera Australia), and Fidelio and The Marriage of Figaro (both for Garsington). See Director’s Note, p. 34.

Born in Casablanca of Italian and Polish parents, the director was educated mainly in France and is a longtime resident of London. Last year he made his Italian directing debut at the Opera di Firenze/ Maggio Musicale Fiorentino (La bohème). Highlights in 2016 included L’heure espagnole/ Gianni Schicchi (Opéra National de Lorraine), Macbeth (Iford Arts), and Cavalleria rusticana/ Pagliacci (Hampstead Garden Opera in their new North London home). Ravella made his Garsington Opera directing debut with a critically and publicly acclaimed production of Strauss’s Intermezzo. He has worked as revival, associate, or assistant director for such major companies as the Royal Opera House/Covent Garden, Glyndebourne, and the major houses of Sydney, Buenos Aires, Monte Carlo, Parma, Los Angeles, and Geneva, among others. Ravella has worked with many major directors, among them John Cox, Sir David McVicar, Robert Carsen, Barrie Kosky, John Copley, and Nicholas Hytner. Upcoming projects this season include Werther (Opéra National de Lorraine) and Falstaff (Garsington Opera).Ravella was nominated for the prestigious Independent Opera Director Fellowship in 2015.

In addition to Lyric’s 2006/07 revival, the American designer’s sets and costumes for Così fan tutte have previously been seen at San Francisco Opera and the Opéra de Monte Carlo. Stylistically Perdziola’s operatic repertoire is remarkably varied, in recent seasons encompassing works as diverse as Giulio Cesare (Fort Worth Opera), Alcina (Indiana University), and The Marriage of Figaro (Garsington Opera); Beatrice and Benedict (Opera Boston) and Faust (Festival Internacional de Macau); Falstaff (Performing Arts Centre, Matsumoto) and Tosca (Cincinnati Opera). Perdziola’s collaboration with director John Cox for Ariadne auf Naxos triumphed in that production’s Lyric premiere, as well as in subsequent revivals at San Francisco Opera and Houston Grand Opera. The designer’s work has also been seen at the Metropolitan Opera (Il pirata), Opera Theatre of Saint Louis (Il re pastore, Faust), Santa Fe Opera (Arabella), Garsington Opera (Cosi fan tutte), Hannover’s Niedersächsische Staatstheater (Faust), and Opera Australia (Arabella, winner of five Helpmann Awards). In addition to an ongoing association with Washington’s Shakespeare Theatre Company (including Helen Hayes Awards for Don Carlos, The Country Wife, and Lady Windermere’s Fan), Perdziola has also designed for the Stratford Shakespeare Festival, American Ballet Theatre, San Francisco Ballet, and Miami City Ballet.

Currently Lyric’s lighting director, Maravich served in the same position from 2006 to 2012 at San Francisco Opera, where he has created lighting for many productions including The Gospel of Mary Magdalene, Così fan tutte, Turandot, Cyroano de Bergerac, Il trittico, Tosca, Simon Boccanegra, Don Giovanni, Nixon in China, and Attila. He has collaborated on the lighting designs for Doktor Faust at Staatsoper Stuttgart, Tannhäuser at the Greek National Opera, and La fanciulla del West, The Makropulos Case, The Daughter of the Regiment, Il trovatore, Samson et Dalila, and Macbeth at San Francisco Opera. Maravich has also designed lighting for Opera Colorado, San Diego Opera, Opera Santa Barbara, Lyric Opera of Kansas City, Florida Grand Opera, Madison Opera, Cal Performances, and Opera San Jose.

Both Cynical and Heartfelt: The Enigma of Così fan tutte

By Martha C. Nussbaum

Così fan tutte, “Thus Do All Women” (subtitled “The School for Lovers”), has now finally entered the Mozart canon. First performed on January 26, 1790, at the Burgtheater in Vienna, it was initially well received, but had only five performances during Mozart’s lifetime, on account of the death of the emperor Joseph II only a month later, and the ensuing mourning period. (Mozart died on December 5, 1791.) During the nineteenth and early twentieth centuries it endured a long eclipse, being considered offensive and immoral. Sometimes, loving the music, people attempted to provide it with a totally different libretto: in one version, the text was that of Shakespeare’s Love’s Labours Lost in French! By now, however, the opera in its original form has won its way into the repertory, and is always in the top twenty of most-performed operas worldwide, though ranking slightly below three other Mozart operas: The Magic Flute, The Marriage of Figaro, and Don Giovanni. The beauty of its music has won the hearts of audiences.

Producers, critics, and audiences, however, continue to find Così a deeply problematic work. The great critic Joseph Kerman goes so far as to write, “Even the most devout Mozartian will have to admit that there is something unsatisfactory about Così” — which he calls “Mozart’s most problematic work.” What is the problem? In essence, it is a felt dissonance between the heartless spirit of Lorenzo Da Ponte’s libretto and the remarkable emotional expressivity of the music, especially in the second act. This dissonance is then rendered more problematic still by the neat cookie-cutter ending in which everything snaps back to the way it was before Act Two.

Da Ponte’s libretto is polished, well-constructed, witty, and cynical. Don Alfonso, the opera’s resident philosopher/observer/cynic, who creates the plan to test the fidelity of the young women, opines that emotions are short-lived and fickle, but the libretto ultimately goes yet further, suggesting that they are altogether unreal and factitious. Much of the work’s humor, in Act One, derives from the fact that the women take their own emotions seriously, but we are urged to see that they are only play-acting, imitating literary expressions of passion. (Singer-actresses have a challenge: while acting they must create the impression of mere play-acting, and later on show how different that is from genuine feeling.) Throughout Act One, Mozart’s music serves Da Ponte’s cynical purpose quite well, creating an artificial comedy with characters who are essentially cardboard cutouts and objects of knowing laughter (by Don Alfonso and the knowing Despina, and by us). We know very little about the nature of Mozart and Da Ponte’s collaboration, but we certainly have no evidence that, like Verdi, Mozart controlled the process and insisted on getting his way; Da Ponte’s letters suggest just the opposite, rightly or wrongly.

But Mozart cannot help taking emotions seriously, and by Act Two his genius for emotional insight, range, and particularity takes over, breaking the clever mold and subverting its purpose. In the other Da Ponte operas, it is also true that Mozart supplies emotional depth to texts that might have been set otherwise. (Just imagine, for example, in how many ways the text of Cherubino’s aria “Voi che sapete” in The Marriage of Figaro might have been set, and how completely it might have lacked the tender longing that it in fact expresses.) In Così, however, the music doesn’t just render emotionally determinate a text that is indeterminate; it actually subverts the entire point of the libretto. No, Don Alfonso, emotions are not just a game, they are real, and people have deep, interesting, and highly individual emotional lives.

In Act One, the girls are not very different from one another, and both play-act at emotions with a grandiosity that signals an absence of authentic self-knowledge and real erotic experience. In Act Two, both discover depths of emotional response in themselves – in highly particular ways. Both Kerman and philosopher Bernard Williams focus on the duet between Fiordiligi and Ferrando, “Fra gli amplexi” (“In the embraces”), which shows Fiordiligi discovering love, and so discovering new capacities in herself. Emotions strike both of the lovers as mysterious, but also as totally real and urgent, as real as anything in the world can be. (And this is so, whether the emotions actually last or not: so long as they exist, they are both real and at the core of the person’s humanity.) The contrast between Fiordiligi’s Act One aria, where she is playing around with ideas of constancy like a would-be drama heroine, and this duet, with its soaring phrases and tremulous expression of passion, could not be more striking – and moving, too, as if we are seeing a mature woman being born. Kerman seems to prefer the emotions of the serious pair to those of the comic pair simply because they are serious. Williams’s preference for the serious pair must be understood in connection with his often-expressed preference for Wagner’s Tristan und Isolde as the operatic paradigm of genuine love. (In introducing the posthumous collection in which his article on Così appears, Williams’s widow notes that he tested their budding relationship by taking her to a performance of Tristan, to see how much she loved it!)

But this is Mozart, the same Mozart who shows again and again that playfulness and humor can be a supreme expression of love’s reciprocity. (And isn’t this an important truth in real life?) So I propose (contra Williams and Kerman, who are a bit contemptuous of the more light-hearted lovers) that we also do justice to the other pair. The moment in all opera that most unfailingly makes me weep for sheer joy at the precariously and lovability of the world is Dorabella and Guglielmo’s Act Two duet, “Il core vi dono” (“I give you a heart”). The usual staging has him give her a heart-shaped locket as a token of love. She accepts it, and they then joke that the heart that was in one breast is now beating in the other’s: his heart (the locket) is now on her breast, and (she says) hers has now gone over there and is beating in his. The music first expresses tender playful alternation, and then, with the delicate staccatos of the line “E batte così” (“And beats just so”), they are suddenly together. (That’s where I cry, invariably.) “O cambio felice,” “O happy exchange.” Dorabella has already said that she chooses Guglielmo because he seems more playful – and one is painfully aware that Ferrando, her original fiancé, was therefore utterly wrong for her (and right for Fiordiligi), since he is all lofty sentiment and no play. And now, with Guglielmo, she suddenly finds what she wanted all along: in the intimacy of joking and play she finds love’s reality, as the hearts change places and then somehow beat in harmony, though from the opposite place.

Lyric
In effect, as Kerman wittily puts it, the second act belongs not to Don Alfonso but to “Don Wolfgango,” who, being himself, took emotion very seriously – including its soaring heights but including, as well, its capacity for tender play – and probed the characters’ depths with varied and aching effect. By offering the maid Despina no corresponding individuality in passion, Mozart allows us to see that in this world emotional individuality requires leisure and may be incompatible with labor.

Act Two belongs to Mozart, but it must end as Da Ponte wrote it. Although the work has been staged in multiple ways, we are evidently supposed to think that the girls go back to their original partners. (Alfonso tells the lovers to marry the girls in spite of their fickleness, which implies that they take their original partners back. This is also the “lesson” intended from start to finish, in the libretto that is.) According to the libretto, there is no loss, because all is convention and emotions are factitious anyway. But given the music of Act Two, the ending is deeply disturbing, and the message finally conveyed a very unpleasant one: as Williams puts it, “the idea that emotions are indeed deep, indeed based on reality, but the world will go on as though they were not, and the social order, which looks to things other than those emotional forces, will win out.” We might even see in the work a critique of the institution of marriage, as inimical to genuine love, at least for women.

Williams thinks that Mozart and Da Ponte collaboratively create this dark and disturbing insight. I find more persuasive Kerman’s suggestion that the libretto is one thing, the music in some respects quite another, and Mozart is trapped by the contrivance of the libretto, creating an ending that turns out jarring and unsatisfying.

And what of the war to which the men march off, to cheerful choral song in praise of the military life? Is that part of the comic contrivance, or is it all too real? Might war not be another way in which the conventions of the world treat human emotions as if they do not matter? The present production suggests that the reality of a real war lies behind the comedy, and that this reality, leaving nothing as it was before, renders the ending yet darker. John Cox, original director of this production, writes me that, as he sees it, the entire comedy “is played out on the edge of this abyss,” and that the darkness of the ending derives from this background reality. This suggestion (whether it’s about the libretto or the music, or both) dovetails with the ideas I have been exploring, though it also suggests a different orientation for our attention. Such layers show the work’s multivocal richness. And they surely do not negate the music’s astonishing capacity for the expression of love’s risks and delights.
Modern Match - Così fan tutte and She’s the Man

The theme of mistaken identity has been intriguing audiences for centuries, from Shakespeare’s Comedy of Errors to Disney’s The Parent Trap. Mozart’s Così fan tutte is no exception as the two officers, Ferrando and Guglielmo, disguise themselves from their fiancées in a need to prove that Don Alfonso is wrong. The (unbelievable) disguises of Così fan tutte and the overall use of mistaken identity isn’t unlike that of DreamWorks’s hit romantic comedy of 2006, She’s the Man, loosely based on Shakespeare’s Twelfth Night.

The opera and the film both begin with commentary on the nature of women: Don Alfonso asserts to the two young men that women are fickle, including their fiancées. In She’s the Man, Viola is denied the chance to play for the men’s soccer team because the coach believes women simply aren’t as athletic as men. According to Alfonso and the soccer coach, women are weak.

This leads to an explicit need to prove these doubters wrong. Ferrando and Guglielmo agree to Alfonso’s bet, claiming their fiancées are faithful. They disguise themselves as “Albanians,” who will woo the sisters while their fiancés (that is, their true identities) are away at war. Similarly, Viola decides to prove the coach wrong by going to an all-boys boarding school and joining their soccer team. She does this by disguising herself as her twin brother, Sebastian. The characters all use disguises to help prove their point.

In recent decades the ending of Così has been staged different ways: although most often the couples return to their original partners after Don Alfonso wins his best, sometimes the young women go with their new partners, and some directors have them all go their separate ways with no one united at the end. The DreamWorks film has an unambiguously happy ending: Viola’s identity is revealed when Sebastian comes back to school. She can then prove that, as a woman, she was good enough to play on a men’s soccer team and confess her love to Duke, giving her a win-win situation. Perhaps mistaken identities can be helpful after all!

— Margaret Rogers

The author, Lyric’s dramaturgy intern last summer, is in her senior year at the University of Minnesota.
We are told next to nothing about the six characters who populate Così fan tutte. (Even the two sisters’ hometown being Ferrara is a piece of opportunistic flattery by the librettist, who at the time was the lover of the soprano nicknamed “La Ferrarese.”) Apart from Despina being a maid, the only useful fact is that Ferrando and Guglielmo are soldiers.

Yet the audience hardly sees them as real soldiers, men whose business is to go forth and kill or be killed, because this identity is quickly suppressed. As part of Don Alfonso’s fictive stratagem they become “Albanians,” performers in a masquerade that deceives their lovers, the aforementioned sisters. By this means, the realities of war are forced out of the story and our two killer heroes are transformed to mere actors.

For the sisters, however, the war is an actuality and its possible outcomes must be faced. Their fiancés, one or both, might be killed, maimed, or never return. Some interpretations of constancy would forbid them to accept other offers of love should the worst happen. Meanwhile, they owe it to their loved ones to be steadfast as a source of strength. This much they know about love from their education.

Under pressure from the “Albanians” and Despina, they discover that war can give to love a sudden urgency. Faced with the likely mortality of their fiancés, they find after all that the erotic fulfillment of love as proffered by the Albanians is a surer route to their happiness. They are invited into, perhaps entitled to, that last-chance embrace. Their lovers may never return, but the Albanians are here now.

As an alternative reading, suppose that the war is not a part of the masquerade, that events in the outside world that Alfonso cannot control ironically convert his fiction to fact, thus vindicating the sisters’ credulity and inflicting a well-deserved sting on their fraudulent men.

The conclusion of Così has always struck me, and many others, as smug (Don Alfonso) and craven (everybody else) – in short, unsatisfactory. None of the four lovers is the same person at the end as at the beginning. The truth, revealed by fiction, is that they are all changeable. Can the original pairings be restored when there has been such a betrayal of trust? It’s clear that both men love Fiordiligi and that Dorabella is despised by the volatile, male-chauvinist Guglielmo, whose friendship with Ferrando must be seriously damaged by mutually inflicted wounds. Any reconciliation founded on such demonstrable fault-lines would be short-lived. Alfonso’s experiment may have won him his bet, but it only answered one question. It leaves a host of others unaddressed.

By bringing the war in from the outside, by moving it from fiction to fact, by refusing to judge the sisters’ choices as immoral and by rejecting Don Alfonso’s glib reconciliation, we can open up the spurious closure of the text and keep the search for truth in motion.

The sisters have learned much about love in a time of war. So, unexpectedly, have the men, who must now become soldiers again. Don Alfonso’s 24-hour masquerade has been a dress rehearsal for the real thing.

When the performance is over, try discussing it with your companions and any other opera lovers you know! You can continue your pleasure in Così fan tutte for hours – even days – by exchanging ideas about it.

Here are some topics we can suggest:

- What did you find most intriguing about this opera and Lyric’s production?
- The notion that women are fickle is what propels the story. Is this true, in your opinion? Why or why not?
- Why do you think Despina chooses to help Don Alfonso and the men in tricking the sisters? Is this a betrayal of women?
- In Act One, the women remain true to their men. Why does this make the men work harder instead of accepting that their fiancées love them?
- This opera is full of misunderstandings and confusion that cause chaos, on occasion amusingly so. What moments did you find the most entertaining and funny? Why?
- In the end, everyone accepts that romantic relationships encompass good and bad times, and that there are lessons to be learned from them. What are the most valuable lessons in love that you’ve learned?
- This opera is carefully balanced between arias, duets, trios, and full ensembles. Speaking just about the music, what moments thrilled you the most?

To continue enjoying Così fan tutte, Lyric dramaturg Roger Pines suggests the following performances:

What is your role here at Lyric, and how long have you held the position?
I’m the production manager for Lyric Unlimited (Lyric’s department devoted to education and community engagement) and the Ryan Opera Center, and I’ve had this position for one year. I am the liaison between those departments and our technical department, and I help coordinate the logistics of the design elements for their different productions. I help facilitate backstage elements like lighting, sound, scenic, and costumes, and I work with the director and creative teams to make sure we are executing the design concept they have in mind. Whether it’s a garage moving on and off stage, specialty scenic floors, or an added disco ball, I work with the rest of the team to figure out how their artistic decisions can be made into a reality within the proposed budget and on schedule.

What led you to work at Lyric?
After graduating from school with a degree in stage management, I quickly became fascinated with production management. In the performing arts, there tend to be many projects where a great idea is there, but the organization needed to see it through is not present. I love being one of the people who facilitate those amazing concepts and bring them to fruition. When I saw the opening for a production manager at Lyric, I knew I had to apply. It was truly a dream of mine to work here with the dedicated technical team and under the roof of this gorgeous building.

What’s a typical day like for you?
That really depends on the production schedule for the day. Sometimes I’m planning the upcoming season schedule for designers, production teams, and simultaneously monitoring that we stay within the budget. I also spend time researching local designers – we look to hire and support local talent for Lyric Unlimited productions – and seeing who’s creating some really amazing work. I might also be fielding emails and questions, attending meetings with designers and directors for upcoming shows, or at an off-site venue making sure a load-in or technical rehearsals are going smoothly.

What’s the most challenging aspect of your job?
It’s a brand new position so there’s no specific template for my role, and no one preceding me to show me the ropes of exactly what the job entails. But that’s allowed me to collaborate with my colleagues to figure out how I can best fulfill the needs of the company. It’s a challenge because that means there is an extra step (or a few!) with every new process, but it’s rewarding.

What keeps you committed to the work you do?
The artistic outcome of the different productions, specifically working on engagement and education programming with Lyric Unlimited and the Ryan Opera Center, is really fulfilling. It’s great to know we’re passing on all of these artistic endeavors to another generation, and showing them how impactful the arts can be. Whether it’s through new commissions that shine a light on stories people haven’t heard before, or taking operatic productions to schools for kids who might have never been exposed to the art form, it’s all extremely relevant. Arts funding is often the first to get cut in schools, so having that available for students to explore is so important for youth development.

What’s something about your job that people might not know?
When a show is in technical rehearsals, my role essentially is just doing what needs to be done in the moment to keep the ball rolling and allow other people to execute their jobs. Sometimes this means literally hopping in a 53-foot-long truck with a truck driver to personally escort them through the depths of “lower-lower” downtown Chicago to get them to a difficult-to-find loading dock.

Favorite Lyric moment?
After working for countless hours with the rest of my team on the Chicago Voices concert, being able to sit in the house for the show was an incredible moment. The atmosphere and energy were so intoxicating. In production, we don’t always get the opportunity to sit in the house and experience firsthand what we’ve helped create. Being immersed in the palpable excitement with our patrons was definitely my favorite moment so far.

Beyond opera, what are your other passions?
Watching the Dallas Cowboys. I grew up in Dallas, and I really enjoy watching sports. My mom taught me everything I know about football through our “Monday Night Football tutoring” sessions we had when I was in the sixth grade. I’ve been in love with the sport (and the team) ever since. It gives me a piece of home here in Chicago.

Sidney N. Shure founded Shure Radio Company in 1925, with offices located at 19 South Wells Street, just two blocks from the future site of the Civic Opera Building. During the Great Depression, when factory-built radio sets became more affordable than the radio kits supplied by his Company, Mr. Shure pivoted his Company’s efforts to developing its own microphones. At the start of World War II, having had great success in microphones, Shure landed a contract with the military, producing microphones used to communicate between tanks, through pilot oxygen masks, and over battleship intercoms. Each product was designed to meet the strict military standards required for battlefield conditions, a level of durability still maintained by the Company today.

In 1949, a bright young woman named Rose Langer landed in Mr. Shure’s office as his executive assistant. Hardworking and ferociously intelligent, Rose quickly proved to be a worthy partner, both in business and in life. Sidney and Rose were married in 1954, and such was their joint leadership that the Board of Directors elected Rose to succeed her husband as Chairman of Shure Incorporated after his death in 1995. She held that role until her passing in January 2016.

“My aunt didn’t have any children of her own,” says Barbara Levie, Rose Shure’s niece. “Her business was like her family, and she felt close to everyone she worked with.” Aside from being extremely clever and business-minded, Barbara describes Rose as “almost regal. She had a style about her and a certain presence that was very unusual.”

Barbara’s father would often bring her and her brother to Rose’s apartment for a day-long adventure. “She would take us on the El downtown, and we’d get on the first car so we could watch the train go into the subway. We would go out to lunch, then to Fannie May Candy, and finally to an opera or a play. Afterward, we’d always go to Kroch’s and Brentano’s, and we were each allowed to buy a book. It was a very enriching experience, and that’s how I grew to appreciate the arts.”

The presence of Shure products at the opera house might seem counterintuitive because Lyric’s mainstage opera singers rarely use amplification. But there are always exceptions. In 2003, Shure Incorporated and Mrs. Shure generously donated significant equipment to Lyric. Speaking voices during operettas and children’s singing voices are usually not strong enough to be heard unaided throughout the opera house. Lyric has, for many years, counted on Shure’s leading technology to smoothly transition from unamplified singing to spoken dialogue, and back again.

In 2012, Lyric began regularly presenting great works from the musical theater canon, with a reputation for exceptional quality, backed by excellent customer service. The Company’s industry standard microphone, the SM58®, will undoubtedly be found in the hands of Adam Levine on Maroon 5’s next tour. Pop stars of the 50s and 60s were regularly photographed crooning into the iconic Model 55 Unidyne®. Those who tune in to Presidential addresses have heard the Shure SM57, the microphone used on the White House lectern since Lyndon B. Johnson held the top office. Wherever sound is produced, Shure is there.

Unlike operas, all singing and dialogue are amplified in these productions, and this was something Lyric was just beginning to learn how to do effectively in a theater designed for unamplified sound. That year, Shure Incorporated provided another generous in-kind donation of microphones and other amplification equipment, including wireless microphone bodypacks that fit unobtrusively in singers’ wardrobes. That equipment was used by Lyric as it made its successful transition into its Musical Theater Initiative, with such productions as Rodgers and Hammerstein’s The Sound of Music, The King and I, and Lerner and Loewe’s My Fair Lady last spring.

In addition to equipment donations, Mr. and Mrs. Shure gave generously throughout their lifetimes, and Shure Incorporated continues its legacy of financial support. Never taking for granted their position in life, Mr. and Mrs. Shure delighted in giving back to organizations that brought them joy. Upon her death in 2016, Rose left bequests to several charitable organizations, including Lyric. In addition, Lyric is grateful to receive continued support from the Shure Charitable Trust created under the Will of Sidney N. Shure, which is also making grants to numerous charitable organizations.

“She truly loved Lyric; it was one of her most revered charities,” Barbara says. “They had four or more seats for every opera, and even after my uncle died, my aunt would invite three people to go with her and take them to dinner in the Graham Room before the opera. It was her highlight.” To honor Rose and Sidney, the Trustees of the Charitable Trust named their four subscription seats on the main floor of the Ardis Krainik Theater with plaques on each one reading, “In Loving Memory of Rose L. and Sidney N. Shure.”

Mr. Shure is remembered at Shure Incorporated as saying of the Company, “We know very well that absolute perfection cannot be attained, but we will never stop striving for it.” Lyric is grateful that some of that near-perfection made its way to Lyric, both onstage and off.

Wallace has an unusual approach: funding projects to test innovative ideas for solving important social problems, conducting research to find out what works and what doesn’t and to fill key knowledge gaps – and then communicating the results to help others. Lyric Opera is the recipient of a multi-phase grant as part of the Foundation’s Building Audiences for Sustainability initiative; the grant is funding research and analysis of Lyric Opera audiences, and will reveal ways in which Lyric can maximize its reach in the community. Lyric’s work will inform lessons that will be shared with the broader field.

Roberta and Bob have annually remained valued members of the production sponsorship family, and generously cosponsor this season’s production of Rigoletto, their tenth opera cosponsorship, continuing a beloved family tradition. Lyric is honored to have Roberta Washlow as an esteemed member of its Board of Directors and Lyric Unlimited Committee. “Opera has always touched me,” Roberta once said. “I love the drama, passion, music, and excitement of a live performance at Lyric. Nothing can replace it, and I hope this beautiful art form will continue for generations.”

HELEN AND SAM ZELL
Helen and Sam Zell are passionate supporters of Chicago’s vibrant cultural scene. They are longtime subscribers to Lyric Opera and have contributed to the Annual Campaign for many years. Helen and Sam have cosponsored several new productions, most recently the first two installments of Lyric’s new Ring cycle, Das Rheingold (2016/17) and this season’s Die Walküre.
The Breaking New Ground Campaign was launched in January 2013 to implement the company’s blueprint for a world-class, twenty-first century opera company. This Campaign allows Lyric to continue to produce major productions of the highest caliber, update media, marketing, and audience development programs, and fortify Lyric’s endowment. The current focus of the Campaign is to modernize the stage of the Ardis Krainik Theatre with state-of-the-art equipment.

To that end, we have established a new Insull Society comprised of loyal patrons who are contributing $10,000 or more for this critically important stage project. To join the Insull Society, please call 312.827.5675.

Lyric Opera is grateful to the following donors who have made contributions of $5,000 and above to the Campaign as of January 2, 2018.

Alumni Perform at Lyric — and Around the World — in 2017/18

MATTHEW POLENZANI
(Duke/Rigoletto; Nadir/The Pearl Fishers)

I am so grateful to Lyric Opera of Chicago for giving me the chance to learn and grow in an amazing environment where beautiful art, made at the highest level, is a daily experience. I was blessed to have made my debut under the baton of Maestro Bruno Bartoletti, with Kiri Te Kanawa, Michael Sylvester, Robert Lloyd, and Alexandru Agache in Simon Boccanegra. I will never forget walking down to the front center of the stage and delivering my line after a trumpet fanfare. It was heady and exciting stuff for a 27-year-old who’d not grown up listening to opera, but had come to love it with a deep and abiding passion.

The voice lessons the Center provided, the classes in language and stage deportment, the opportunity to share the stage with great singers like Sam Ramey, Kurt Moll, Catherine Malfitano, and Ben Heppner among so many others — these experiences are priceless! Without the training, planning, and work done in my years in the Ryan Opera Center, and the help and leadership of the staff, I would not be where I am today. I am now about to celebrate my 20th consecutive season with the Metropolitan Opera, where I have given more than 350 performances.

I want to give a big thank you to the donors who continue to support the Ryan Opera Center, allowing it to remain one of the best training programs for singers in the world. Your love and care for this beautiful art form helps ensure its survival, and your support means the world to me and the emerging artists you are helping today.
