Lyric
Lyric
All of us attending this performance are here because we appreciate great singing. The singing voice in opera carries with it emotions that tug at our hearts, drawing us to the opera’s characters and into the situations that shape their lives. It can ravish us through sheer beauty of sound, but also stagger us through its technical virtuosity, leaving us in awe of the singer’s courage and accomplishment. What makes the voice the most expressive as well as the most exhilarating of all instruments will be very much in evidence when you experience Vincenzo Bellini’s I puritani.

We don’t hear this opera in live performances as frequently as a number of other bel canto works, but it certainly is one of this repertoire’s greatest masterpieces. I’ve always treasured I puritani for the glorious opportunities it offers the principal artists, especially the leading tenor and soprano. You need only listen to Arturo’s soaring entrance aria or Elvira’s heartrending mad scene to realize how extraordinarily elegant and expressive Bellini melodies can be. More than perhaps any other work, it’s I puritani that is most often described as “the essence of bel canto.”

The vocal demands of this opera are such that no company can consider producing it without four stupendously gifted principal artists. Thus it is particularly exhilarating for me to welcome back to Lyric the wonderful quartet who will be performing it here this season.

Having believed very strongly in the talent of Albina Shagimuratova since the earliest days of her career, I introduced her to Lyric audiences five seasons ago. I’m thrilled that she’s following her successes here as Gilda and Lucia with her role debut as Bellini’s poignant Elvira. Like Albina, Lawrence Brownlee has won international acclaim in the bel canto repertoire. He is widely regarded as today’s preeminent interpreter of the high-flying role of Arturo. Ryan Opera Center alumnus Anthony Clark Evans, now launched on what is clearly going to be an outstanding career, is our Riccardo, and Adrian Sâmpetrean, who debuted here last season as a memorably warm-voiced Raimondo in Lucia di Lammermoor, is back with us to portray Giorgio.

I’m pleased to welcome again to Lyric for this production Enrique Mazzola, who was on the podium for our memorable Lucia last season. Enrique is a born bel canto interpreter. His instinctive grasp of the style has brought him tremendous praise at Glyndebourne and major houses from Paris and Zurich to Berlin and Moscow.

Elsewhere in this program, you’ll read about the remarkable artists who created the leading roles in this opera and became universally known as the “Puritani quartet.” More than 140 years later, at the Metropolitan Opera, another illustrious quartet – Joan Sutherland, Luciano Pavarotti, Sherrill Milnes, and James Morris – premiered the production you’re seeing at Lyric this season. Those artists created a new standard for this opera and carried forward the finest traditions of Bellini performances. After you hear our Puritani, I know you’ll agree with me that our artists this season are doing the same.

Lyric
From the Chairman

On behalf of the Board of Directors, I’m delighted to welcome you to Lyric Opera of Chicago.

This season has been a particularly varied and distinctive one. We began with Gluck’s Orphée et Eurydice in John Neumeier’s historic new production. Then came a powerfully dramatic revival of Verdi’s Rigoletto, the second installment of Lyric’s monumental new production of Wagner’s Ring cycle with Die Walküre, Bizet’s ravishing The Pearl Fishers, and Puccini’s formidable Turandot. I’m thrilled that you’re here tonight for Bellini’s glorious I puritani, and I hope you’ll return for the last two operas of the mainstage season: a gem of the Mozart repertoire, Così fan tutte, and a return to French repertoire with Gounod’s matchlessly romantic Faust.

Speaking personally, one of the most rewarding aspects of Lyric – not only as chairman, but as a longtime subscriber and patron – is my joy in introducing family, friends, and business colleagues to the company and the art form. I hope you’ll consider doing the same! When I receive out-of-town visitors during the opera season, I always try to include an evening at Lyric. It’s inevitably a major highlight of their stay.

A Lyric performance isn’t only an opportunity to dress up and go out with your significant other or with close friends for an elegant evening – it’s also an unforgettable and rewarding experience of timeless stories set to some of the world’s greatest music and performed by many of the top artists of our day.

Lyric’s mainstage productions are, of course, the core of every season we present. I also encourage you to explore the unique activities of Lyric Unlimited, our initiative focused on community engagement and education. It is one of the ways that the company stays relevant as a cultural service provider to all of Chicago, whether with newly commissioned works, community-created performances or the special programs presented in dozens of public schools all over Chicago every year.

The level of creativity at work in Lyric Unlimited presentations has been truly inspiring, and it has exposed the art form of opera to tens of thousands of students across Chicagoland.

By presenting opera in new and non-traditional ways, Lyric Unlimited helps to grow and expand our audiences. I invite you to join me at one of the Lyric Unlimited performances of Fellow Travelers in March or Family Day at Lyric on April 7.

At Lyric, we truly cherish our donors and patrons. We consider each one of you as members of the Lyric family. It can sometimes be trite to declare, “Every gift counts,” but at Lyric it’s true: you’re going above and beyond what you’re paying for the ticket price. You’re investing in Lyric, entrusting that we will turn your gift into great art. We take that responsibility very seriously and are constantly imagining new ways to enhance your personal experience at Lyric, build new audiences for opera, and do it all in the most cost-effective way we can.

Many thanks to all of you who play a vital role in ensuring that our great art form and our great company continue to serve Chicago and the world of opera today and in the years to come.

Cheers
to Lyric’s Volunteers

Baritone Thomas Hampson (far right) stops by the phone room during Operathon 2010.

Lyric’s boards and other core volunteer groups are comprised of some of the company’s most passionate subscribers, advocates, and supporters, as well as curious, eager new fans. Between them, they spearhead all of Lyric’s major events, volunteer as greeters for performances, and raise a significant portion of the annual fundraising goal, which is upwards of $30 million each year. They’re civically engaged in Chicago and around the world, and broaden Lyric’s reach exponentially through their networks. If you’ve ever wondered what it would be like to be involved with one of the world’s great cultural institutions, or have a desire to share your love of Lyric, read on to learn about each group’s unique set of characteristics and activities.

Since Lyric’s inception in 1954, the Chapters community has provided consistent volunteer support, and today consists of approximately 800 members in thirteen regional Chapters from as close to the Lyric Opera House as the near north side of Chicago to as far as Lake Geneva, Wisconsin. The groups are overseen by the Chapters’ Executive Board, composed of representatives from each Chapter. These die-hard opera fans kept Lyric running in the early days, and their gumption and determination to establish a resident opera company for the great city of Chicago is well documented by one of the founding Chapter members, Gene Andersen: “It was all very personal, everything we did. We would sit around as a board and handwrite fundraising letters. We wanted to see it work, and it did work, and we were so proud of what we had accomplished. It really made us feel like we belonged to Lyric, and that Lyric belonged to us.”

While Lyric now has a robust staff responsible for day-to-day operations, Chapter volunteers are still the face of the company in many ways. Current Chapters’ Executive Board president Sherie Shapiro devised a new program called the “Getting to Know You” project, which launched during the run of The King and I in 2016. “Lyric was seeing thousands of new patrons come through the doors of the Lyric Opera House for the first time during the musical each spring, all of whom were unfamiliar with the facility. To help guide these newcomers, Chapter volunteers served as greeters in the Daniel F. and Ada L. Rice Grand Foyer. We welcomed guests to Lyric, pointed out places of interest within the opera house and told them on what level their seats were located and where the bathrooms are.

Each Chapter organizes its own calendar of social and educational events, often teaming up with one another to present an artist or speaker of particular attraction. They come together for an All-Chapters Social each spring, and Operathon — Lyric’s annual radio fundraiser — in the fall. “Working the phone room at Operathon is always great fun, and it’s wonderful to interact with other Chapter members and the public,” says Jackie Knight, president of the Near North Chapter. Former Northwest Chapter president Dorothy Kuechl agrees: “What I love about Operathon is that you get to work and socialize with other Chapter members, and also learn more about what the Lyric staff does. Of course, I relish the opportunity to meet stars at Operathon, too. Thomas Hampson is so charming, and he makes a point of speaking with everyone. Christine Goerke is fantastic as well, as are all the artists who take the time to visit with us.”

Another group of people who work hard both behind the scenes and sometimes in the front of house are the Ticket Office Volunteers. A position reserved for the most passionate opera lovers, a regular rotation on the ticket office weekly schedule may find one stuffing subscription brochures or staffing the Concierge desk in the Nancy W. Knowles Lobby during performances. These dedicated patrons work with director of audience services Sue Niemi, who says proudly, “Every ticket that goes out the door is carefully packaged by our volunteers. They also help the development department mail solicitations and invitations, and are responsible for keeping up with a large volume of incoming and outgoing mail.” Sue recognizes one exceptional volunteer each year by presenting him or her with the highly-coveted Volunteer of the Year award, complete with a celebratory shindig for all.

The Guild Board of Directors is a dynamic group of highly knowledgeable operaphiles and curious new friends, who are often well-established professionals looking to lend their time to an organization they believe in. “I was ready for a more consistent commitment to giving back to my community,” says Guild Board membership chair Maggie Rock, whose primary role is introducing new people to Lyric. “Lyric’s culture and mission were a perfect fit for me. I love the world-class product, and the focus on evolving the art form is inspiring and so important.”

Although the Guild Board’s projects have undergone some changes in the recent past (Fantasy of the Opera was retired in 2014 after 30 years headlining the winter social calendar, and Lyric Unlimited is offering regularly scheduled Backstage Tours in lieu of the Guild Board’s former annual spring event), new initiatives include a spring musical celebration presented in partnership with Lyric’s esteemed Women’s Board, and helping shape Lyric Unlimited’s first annual Family Day on April 7, 2018.

It’s not all parties and pompons; the Guild Board takes seriously its mission to advocate for Lyric in the community. “One of the responsibilities of being on the Guild Board is to act as an ambassador for Lyric,” says Dan Manoogian, a Guild Board member since 2014. “I take this role to heart because I want to share my passion and love of opera with others in the hope of getting them to attend performances and support the art form.”

Many Guild Board members are also active on Lyric’s Business Ensemble, a group of corporate leaders who help introduce prospective new corporate partners to Lyric through a variety of client entertaining and networking events. Corporate donors receive promotional ticket offers for their employees, allowing Guild Board and Business Ensemble members to share their love of opera with colleagues and clients.

Another advocacy group geared toward both the opera-curious and opera-hungry alike is the Lyric Young Professionals (LYP). Tailored to recent college graduates and emerging business leaders ages 21-45, members of this group eagerly take advantage of specially-priced subscription packages and social events intended to provide a platform for falling in love with opera without having to take out another student loan.

“I joined mostly for the discounted tickets,” says LYP Board member J.J. Williams, “which gave me a chance to learn more about opera by experiencing it. I also began going to LYP social functions, and within the first few months of attending performances and events, I had been inspired by the passion for the arts and opera, and had made some good friendships as well.”

Budding philanthropists in their own right, LYP hosts several fundraising events throughout the year, most notably the annual Halloween Masquerade, held — you guessed it — every October in the iconic Lyric Opera House Rice Grand Foyer. Money raised through LYP programming is earmarked to help underwrite the operatic training provided to members of The Patrick G. and Shirley W. Ryan Opera Center Ensemble. The synergy of backing the next generation of opera stars has given new meaning to the LYP mission of “building the next generation of opera supporters.”

For younger audiences interested in learning more about opera and gaining a deeper understanding of opera as an art form and a business, the Youth Opera Council is a tight-knit group of 23 high school students who receive behind-the-scenes access to artists and senior staff, as well as incentives to bring their parents and classmates to Lyric. Members are selected after an application and interview process, and participants range from the aspiring opera singer to the future non-profit administrator. Events include A Night at the Opera, where council members host a lively reception before attending a performance at Lyric with up to 200 of their peers, and Movie Night, where a film version of an opera is shown in one of Lyric’s backstage rehearsal rooms.

Although each group differs in charge and character, one common sentiment pervades: an immense gratitude for the many ways Lyric enriches their lives. “I am quite grateful to be associated with such a great organization,” says Manoogian. “Being a volunteer has provided me with opportunities and access to things, people, places, and events that I wouldn’t have had if I weren’t involved. I’ve enjoyed educational lectures from a variety of the brilliant people critical to Lyric’s success, as well as meeting a number of internationally-renowned opera stars. These activities have deepened my knowledge and therefore enhanced my enjoyment.”
“Having the opportunity to meet and connect with like-minded individuals has added so much joy and fulfillment to my life,” says Martha Grant, vice president of the Lyric Young Professionals Board. “I have made lifelong friends, felt that I have made a positive impact on an art form that I love, and had the opportunity to engage with some extremely bright and talented individuals both on stage and off. While our board is certainly a working board and, thus, requires a time commitment, I can truly say that every moment that I’ve spent working with and for Lyric has been rewarding and absolutely worth the time and effort involved.”

“I am in awe of the knowledge and devotion of so many of the Chapter members,” adds Shapiro, who made a point to visit each of the thirteen Chapters at the start of her tenure as president. “I am truly blessed to be a part of the Chapter community and feel that it has enhanced my opera experience.”

Aside from the personal enjoyment gained by our volunteers, there is a deep sense of responsibility to secure opera’s reputation as a vibrant and relevant art form for generations to come. Lisa DeAngelis, president of the Lyric Young Professionals, ardently states, “I lend my time and energy to ensure that opera is around for generations to come and young artists have continued opportunities to grow, perform, and share their talents with others. In a world overrun with conflict, music is a powerful tool to bring us together, build empathy, and encourage community. At the end of the day, I’m proud to say that’s what I support, through my love of music and as a member of the Lyric Opera family.” Williams says, “The arts can only be sustained by passionate people like us lending our time and resources to ensure the art form can continue to touch the lives of generations ahead.”

Opera tells fascinating and dramatic stories using a powerful and intoxicating blend of orchestral music, beautiful voices, dramatic stage sets, acting, costumes, lighting, props, and chorus and dance,” says Manoogian. When encouraging someone to give opera a try, he “explain[s] to them the visceral charges I get from hearing certain songs sung and how emotionally moving a performance can be. An evening at the opera is like no other entertainment experience I know of. I usually leave with my head reeling and heart racing as I reflect on the drama and beauty of this wonderful art form.”

ACT THREE

Elvira’s garden

Scene 1. As dawn breaks, Bruno Robertson leads the Puritan soldiers in prayer before they set about their duties. Villagers enter in a festive mood and announce that it is Elvira’s wedding day. Sir Riccardo Forth appears, brooding and in despair. Lord Gualtiero Walton has yielded to his daughter Elvira’s wish to marry Lord Arturo Talbot, a royalist opposed to Cromwell and the Puritan cause. Lord Walton has thus broken his promise to Riccardo that Elvira should be his bride. Bruno’s attempts to comfort the rejected suitor are to no avail. Riccardo laments his lost happiness.

Scene 2. Unaware of her father’s change of heart, Elvira has resolved not to go through with the loveless marriage to Riccardo. She learns from her uncle, Sir Giorgio Walton, that the wedding preparations are for her and her beloved Arturo, through her uncle’s intercession. Elvira is overwhelmed with joy and gratitude.

Scene 3. The residents of the fortress assemble to greet the bridegroom. Among them is the condemned royal prisoner, Queen Enrichetta. Arturo recognizes her and promises to rescue her. Elvira is filled with a happiness she longs to share with the prisoner; before leaving to prepare for the ceremony, she gives Enrichetta a veil, a present from Arturo. Alone, Arturo recognizes the prisoner as the Queen and promises to rescue her. Arturo convinces her that in his company and disguised as his bride, she will be able to evade the sentries.

Their escape is barred by the arrival of Riccardo, who challenges Arturo to a duel for stealing Elvira’s affections from him. Enrichetta places herself between them and, in the confusion, her identity is revealed. Riccardo offers no further hindrance to their departure, knowing that Arturo’s treason will prevent his ever marrying Elvira. She and the other Puritans return to the courtyard; in the distance, they can see the fugitives riding away, leaving Elvira distraught.

ACT TWO

Giorgio describes to the Puritans the madness that has overcome Elvira, who believes that Arturo has abandoned her for another woman. Riccardo appears with a proclamation naming him leader of Cromwell’s forces and ordering him to capture and execute Arturo. A disheveled Elvira appears. Her confused mind darts from the reality of Arturo’s departure to the delusion that he has never left. Giorgio begs Riccardo to save his rival’s life for Elvira’s sake. Riccardo agrees to spare him if he returns alone and defenseless, but if he returns armed and with military escort, the rebel will be crushed. Giorgio declares that he will join Riccardo in battle if England is attacked.

ACT THREE

Pursued by Cromwell’s troops, Arturo approaches the fortress hoping desperately to see Elvira once more. The lovers are soon joyfully reunited. Arturo refuses to leave Elvira, despite his personal danger. The troops come upon them and seize Arturo. A sentence of death is about to be carried out, which shocks Elvira and restores her reason. Suddenly a messenger arrives with the news of Cromwell’s victory and the pardon of all prisoners, leaving the way clear for Arturo and Elvira to marry.

Iconic coloratura roles in 19th-century Italian opera have been central to the career of the internationally celebrated Russian soprano. She has triumphed as Lucia (Lyric, Metropolitan Opera, La Scala, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Berlin, Moscow, St. Petersburg, role debut in Houston), Violetta/La traviata (Houston, Moscow, Bolshoi), and Gilda/Rigoletto (Lyric, San Francisco). This season Shagimuratova marks her return to Houston Grand Opera as Violetta (she is a proud alumna of the Houston Grand Opera Studio), the Deutsche Oper Berlin as Gilda, and the Bayerische Staatsoper as Semiramide. Having attracted international attention as Gold Medal winner of Moscow's 2007 Tchaikovsky Competition, Shagimuratova debuted in Europe under Riccardo Muti as the Queen of the Night (Salzburg Festival). Closely identified with that role, she has sung it at the Met, the Lucerne Festival, the Bolshoi, La Scala (DVD), Covent Garden, and the leading houses of Vienna, Munich, Berlin, Hamburg, San Francisco, Los Angeles, and Houston. Recent successes onstage also include Konstanze (Met, role debut; Houston Grand Opera), Aspasia/Mitridate, re di Ponto (Royal Opera House, Covent Garden), Lyudmila/Ruslan and Lyudmila (Bolshoi, DVD), and Donna Anna (Glyndebourne; Covent Garden's production in London and on tour in Japan). Concerts have brought Shagimuratova to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Houston Symphony, the Maggio Musicale Fiorentino, and the Danish National Symphony. Shagimuratova's artistry has also earned acclaim at the leading houses of London, Vienna, Paris, Berlin, Madrid, and Brussels, as well as the Salzburg Festival. This season he joins Opera Philadelphia as artistic advisor and will be heard in the title role/Le Comte Ory (Zurich), as Ernesto/Don Pasquale (Paris), and in a new song cycle, Cycles of My Being by composer Tyshawn Sorey and lyricist Terrance Hayes, in Philadelphia (world premiere), Chicago (presented by Lyric Unlimited), and at Carnegie Hall. Other successes include appearances in Seattle (Don Giovanni), the Met (La donna del lago, Cinderella, The Barber of Seville), Munich (Cosi fan tutte, Semiramide, Il turco in Italia), Pittsburgh Opera (La fille du régiment), and Opera Philadelphia (world premiere of Charlie Parker's Yardbird, reprised at New York's Apollo Theater). The tenor was the first to sing Rinaldo/Armida at the Met, a much-acclaimed portrayal seen worldwide in HD (available on DVD). Brownlee has performed with many major orchestras including those of Chicago, Philadelphia, Boston, Cleveland, New York, Berlin, Rome, and Munich. He has recorded Barber, Carmina Burana, Rossini's Stabat Mater, and four solo albums, including the Grammy-nominated Virtuoso Rossini Arias and his recent release, Allegro Io Son.

A native of Owensboro, Kentucky, and a Ryan Opera Center alumus, the baritone appears this season in a reprise of Angela Rice's Easter oratorio Thy Will Be Done (National Chorale at New York's Lincoln Center), the Richard Tucker Gala (Carnegie Hall, recorded for PBS telecast), and the Harris Theater's “Beyond the Aria” series. Evans has recently received critical praise in company debuts as Sharpless/Madama Butterfly (San Francisco Opera, San Diego Opera), the Huntsman/Rusalka (Metropolitan Opera), and Marcello/Il tabarro (Opera Theatre of Saint Louis). Last summer he represented the United States in the BBC Cardiff Singer of the World competition, reaching the final round. He debuted in Chicago in 2013 in Bernstein's Songfest at Ravinia. A Murray State University alumnus, Evans first attracted national attention as a Grand Finals winner of the 2012 Metropolitan Opera National Council Auditions. Recipient of grants from the Licia Albanese-Puccini Foundation, the Richard Tucker Foundation, and the Luminarts Cultural Foundation, he is also a former first-prize winner in the Giulio Gari Foundation Vocal Competition, the Marcello Giordani Foundation Competition, and the Dallas Opera Guild Vocal Competition.

Bel Canto Miracle: Bellini’s I puritani Ennobles the Art of Singing

By Roger Pines

Vincenzo Bellini became famous for what one of his greatest admirers, Richard Wagner, called “endless melody.” The music of Bellini has stood the test of time, with singers and audiences rejoicing in his melodies’ beauty, grace, and sheer soulfulness.

Bellini’s operas supremely exemplify the bel canto style – the deployment of a beautiful voice exhibiting the utmost elegance and technical finish, with that voice invariably used for eloquent expressive purposes. This was one composer who knew how to let a voice bloom. He wrote for singers, not against them; their sound and their musicality mattered deeply to him. At the same time, he understood the power of beautiful singing to communicate feeling. In fact, he wrote to the operatically inexperienced librettist of I puritani, “Engrave on your mind in indelible letters: in opera, it is the singing that moves to tears, that arouses terror, that inspires death.”

Most of Bellini’s operatic output falls within the genre of romantic tragedy, but (miracle of miracles!) no one dies in I puritani – it actually has a happy ending. Still, like Bellini’s other operas, this one is about great singing, above all. And this composer’s incomparable gift for vocal writing (especially his ability to combine elegance with moments of dazzling virtuosity) was never more evident than in I puritani.

Bellini’s pitifully short life began in 1801, in Catania, Sicily (Wagner, atypically and – given what we know of Bellini’s temperament – not exactly accurately, called him “that gentle Sicilian”). Son of an organist, he was a musical prodigy, already composing at age six. At the college where he studied in Naples, he produced many pieces, including his first opera, Adelson e Salvini, premiered by students. Fortunately, in the audience was the most powerful figure in Italian opera at the time, Domenico Barbaia, manager of Naples’s Teatro San Carlo. Deeply impressed, he commissioned Bellini for his first professionally produced opera, Bianca e Gernando, first heard at the San Carlo in 1826.

Bellini was an incorrigibly self-absorbed character. Exceedingly ambitious, he was convinced (not without reason, given his extraordinary talent) that of all Italian theaters, it was at Milan’s prestigious La Scala that he truly belonged. Barbaia was running that house as well, and he offered Bellini a commission. That opera, Il pirata in 1827, proved an immense success. Six other works followed in Italian houses over the next seven years, among them two gems of bel canto, La sonnambula and Norma.

Paris being the true mainspring of operatic activity in Europe at the time, it was inevitable that Bellini would eventually move there. He easily established himself within the elite of the city’s musical and literary scene. When not indulging in suspicion and petty jealousies, he could really turn on the charm. His irresistible handsomeness also didn’t hurt as he proceeded to make all sorts of important connections.

In early 1834 Bellini signed a contract for a new opera, working now with a new librettist, Count Carlo Pepoli, a poet who had written nothing in theater or opera before. The work, I puritani, had been commissioned by Paris’s Théâtre Italien, where Gioachino Rossini – his days of composing opera now behind him – was acting as artistic director.

This was a hugely important venue in the promotion of Italian opera. For example, the Bellini opera hadn’t even been premiered when Bellini heard, to his horror, that his rival, Gaetano Donizetti, would be composing a new work for the Théâtre Italien the following year. Bellini, who felt considerable jealousy towards fellow composers, wrote a letter to his uncle that seems almost paranoiac: “I had a fever for three days, as I became aware of the plot actually being prepared against me. Rossini decided to have Donizetti commissioned also, because in that way – set up against me – he would suffocate me, exterminate me, with the support of Rossini’s colossal influence.”

Rehearsals began in December, and the new opera, I puritani, was introduced at the Théâtre Italien on January 24, 1835, scoring one of the greatest triumphs of Bellini’s career. The premiere was actually attended by Donizetti who, being invariably a humble, generous human being, wrote to a colleague, “I don’t deserve anything like the success of I puritani.”

Within two months of the final performance of that original run, the four stupendous singers who had premiered the opera – and who came to be known collectively as the “Puritani Quartet” – were singing it in London, where it created a sensation. Once the youthful Princess Victoria ascended to the throne in 1837, the very first concert she arranged at Buckingham Palace included an appearance by the quartet (she also had singing lessons with the quartet’s bass member, Luigi Lablache). She adored this opera, and in the coming years, as England’s music-loving queen, she referred to it as “our dear Puritani”!

Bellini was deep into planning new projects when he fell ill in September of 1835. He died shortly thereafter of what was apparently a severe intestinal inflammation, a few weeks shy of his 34th birthday. At his funeral, three of the four members of the “Puritani Quartet” were in attendance; the “Lacrimosa” section of the Requiem Mass was sung to the melody of the nobly beautiful tenor aria that graces the opera’s final scene.

The novel Puritani has as its source a somewhat musty historical drama of 1828 called Têtes rondes et cavaliers (Roundheads and Cavaliers), by two exceedingly successful Paris playwrights, Jacques-François Ancelot and Xavier Boniface Saintine. The pair, in turn, had very loosely based their play on a novel from 12 years before by Sir Walter Scott, Old Mortality. The novel takes place in Scotland, and its title has frequently been referred to in Italian translation as I puritani di Scozia (The Puritans of Scotland). That title for decades was, oddly, applied to Bellini’s opera, which has nothing to do with Scotland.

We hear from the soprano Elvira, our heroine, only very briefly – and from offstage – in the first scene. The next scene, which comprises a duet for her and her uncle Giorgio (bass), begins with the girl’s declaration that if she’s dragged to the altar to marry her betrothed, Riccardo, she’ll die of grief. She expresses this in flights of extravagant florid singing, giving a clear indication that she’s quite an emotional young woman! We see her in a much more joyous frame of mind later in Act One, once she’s set to marry the Puritan Riccardo’s enemy, the Royalist Arturo. Bellini emphasizes Elvira’s ebullience with his brilliant decision to use the buoyant rhythms of a polonaise as the basis for her aria, “Son vergin vezzosa in vesta di sposa” (“I’m a girl dressed as a bride”).

Everything changes for Elvira mere minutes later when, seeing Arturo leaving the fortress with a veiled woman, she assumes he’s being unfaithful – she loses her reason while singing the most sublime Bellini legato. That continues into Act Two, where the composer gives his heroine a particularly celebrated mad scene. It’s a genuine touchstone – music against which virtually all aspiring bel canto sopranos have measured themselves. On the other hand, it’s also a moment of such devastating melancholy that in performance it often brings tears to the eyes of many listeners.

Yes, it’s a mad scene, but rather more restrained dramatically than the one Donizetti composed for Lucia di Lammermoor. The initial aria of despair is followed by a hopeful (and more vocally glittering) second aria, in which Elvira begs the absent Arturo to return to her. “My darling,” she sings, “come back to love!” The sequence of descending scales on the word “amore” is the toughest moment vocally – but also the most exhilarating moment – anywhere in Elvira’s music, written to do justice to the extraordinary instrument of the role’s creator, Giulia Grisi, a sort of “super-soprano.”

Grisi was one singer who really could sing anything – she had technique to burn! Like her successor more than a century later, Dame Joan Sutherland, Grisi could bounce from light to heavy roles effortlessly; she knew exactly how to produce a certain girlishness in her sound, which she would have needed for much of Elvira’s music. She could also plumb the depths of emotion, as in the duet with Arturo in Act Three: in a very moving passage, Elvira asks her beloved how long it’s been since he went away – “Three months,” he replies. “No, no,” says Elvira sadly, “it was three centuries of sighing and torment – three centuries of horror!” However simple this vocal line may be, a sensitive interpreter can draw a flood of emotion from it.

Elvira’s beloved Arturo makes his first entrance with one of the most soaring of all Bellini tenor arias, and possibly the loveliest moment musically in his entire role, “A te, o cara” (“To you, oh, dear one”). The singer can sculpt this music as if working in the finest marble. It must have been miraculous in the voice of the first Arturo, Giovanni Battista Rubini, one of the greatest glories of the bel canto era. He wasn’t glamorous and apparently didn’t impress at all as a stage personality, but he was vocally and musically beyond compare, his singing wide-ranging, matchlessly graceful, and totally effortless.

Later in Act One, after a brief but vocally aggressive confrontation with Riccardo, Arturo leaves the vocal glory to his colleagues, staying offstage for all of Act Two. In the final act he returns to take the stage, first in a ravishing song of longing for Elvira, then in their lengthy duet. The latter’s final section presents a declaration of the couple’s joy in loving each other. It’s assertive music and it communicates utter confidence (as in the couple’s jump to a unison high C). Once Arturo is captured, all eyes are on him as he sings “Credeasi, miserla da me tradita” (“The poor girl believed I betrayed her”), declaring that he can face heaven’s anger if he can die with Elvira beside him. This is Arturo’s toughest music, another glorious Bellini legato line but moving progressively higher as it proceeds. For Rubini, the first Arturo, Bellini actually wrote the climax with an F above high C, a note encountered very few times anywhere in the entire history of tenor repertoire.

In Bellini operas, the romantic pair generally gets the lion’s share of attention, but I puritani is different – the baritone and bass have substantial opportunities, too. Riccardo begins the opera lamenting that he’s lost Elvira, expressing that misery in a cavatina – that is, an aria emphasizing lamenting that he’s lost Elvira, expressing that misery in a cavatina – that is, an aria emphasizing an easily flowing line and the ultimate in graceful phrasing, absolutely typical of bel canto in general and exemplified to perfection by Bellini. When urged to devote his energy to leading the Puritans in battle, Riccardo can’t get Elvira out of his mind, and declares as much in his cabaletta. This is another wonderful convention of bel canto opera (we hear it in Elvira’s mad scene, and we recognize it later in much of the Verdi repertoire). This follow-up aria is generally livelier in tempo and sometimes – although not in Riccardo’s case – more elaborate vocally than the cavatina. The first Riccardo, Antonio Tamburini, the bel canto era’s only superstar baritone, sang flawlessly and, unlike many of his ilk, was both impressive to behold and an outstanding actor. We can easily imagine how magnificently he embodied the role.

We hear from Giorgio, the opera’s principal bass, not just in the big duet with his niece Elvira, but at the opening of Act Two, in his aria sadly describing how distracted the poor girl has become. In contrast to the dashing Tamburini, Giorgio was created by the famously rotund Luigi Lablache, another Italian with a large, beautiful, agile voice and a vivid presence (often employed in comic roles). Bellini gives his Act-Two finale to the bass and baritone, a combination of voices quite rare in bel canto and not what one would necessarily have expected of this composer. He rose to the challenge, however, with the only passage in I puritani for which the description “elementally exciting” would be appropriate. This is Giorgio telling Riccardo that if he doesn’t do all he can to save Arturo’s life, the ghosts of both Elvira and Arturo will haunt him forever. Having been reduced to tears, Riccardo now agrees. They anticipate a battle between the Roundheads and the Cavaliers — “Let the words ‘country,’ ‘victory,’ and ‘honor’ awaken terror in the enemy,” sings Giorgio, and that leads into their call to arms. Along with Elvira’s mad scene, “Suoni la tromba” (“Sound the trumpet”) is by far the most popular number in this score — a moment that keeps audiences returning to the music of I puritani over and over again.

Some critics have felt that the poetic romantic drama of La sonnambula suited Bellini better than the historical drama of I puritani. He was a huge admirer of Rossini’s monumental Guillaume Tell, reportedly seeing it more than 30 times. Had he lived, no doubt he would have moved into a more dramatic, grander-scale mode of writing, but it wasn’t to be. Let’s be grateful for what we have — a score that captivates the ear. As the composer Arrigo Boito said, “Whoever doesn’t love Bellini doesn’t love music.”

Modern Match - I puritani

“Love conquers all” has often been a common theme in operas, books, movies, plays, and more — seemingly, since the beginning of time. Audiences relish the experience of two sweethearts prevailing in their quest to find love, ranging from the fairytale story of Cinderella to ABC’s reality TV series The Bachelor!

In Bellini’s I puritani, the question arises: can love conquer hate? The opera follows the journey of forbidden love, questioning what two lovers will risk to be together. These high stakes are similarly seen in a classic story that’s constantly being reinvented for modern audiences: Shakespeare’s Romeo and Juliet.

For starters, both Arturo and Romeo must prove their love, against their enemies. Arturo (a Royalist) and Elvira (a Puritan) long to be together while Romeo (Montague) and Juliet (Capulet) fall in love despite their families’ mutual hatred. Besides their opposing sides, even more trouble is at hand because the women are both betrothed to different men. Riccardo (betrothed to Elvira) and Count Paris (betrothed to Juliet) both cause numerous problems for the young lovers.

Their fights for love certainly don’t run smoothly. Arturo runs away with Queen Enrichetta, in an attempt to save her, causing Elvira to go mad. Riccardo, out of jealousy, points out that her Arturo has run away with another woman. Only after many emotional trials do the two reconcile and reassure each other of their love. Romeo also runs away (to escape death). In an effort to reunite her with Romeo, Friar Laurence gives Juliet a sleeping potion and she’s soon pronounced dead. Being separated from Romeo again causes confusion, as Romeo doesn’t realize Juliet is still alive. By her tomb, Romeo drinks poison to kill himself. Juliet, awakening to find her love dead, takes a dagger and stabs herself.

Nevertheless, love ultimately conquers all in these pieces. Arturo and Elvira are finally free to marry, as the war between the Puritans and Royalists comes to an end. Romeo and Juliet may perish, but their love for each reconciles their two feuding families. Even hatred stands no chance against the power of love.

The author, Lyric’s dramaturgy intern last summer, is in her senior year at the University of Minnesota.
How does the piece connect with a modern audience?
This piece is set during the English Civil War, when those loyal to the crown were at war with those backing Parliament. Much like our own Civil War, the conflict permeated deep into the daily lives of ordinary people, and came between loved ones. I puritani centers on a family (Lord Walton and his daughter Elvira) that is stuck in a divided world where their allegiances are on one side, and Arturo, Elvira’s boyfriend, is on the other. The opera keenly presents a situation with people questioning allegiance, or trying to balance their personal beliefs and their ideologies. Nowadays, I think that is particularly resonant; you get, among families and friends, people with vastly different ideologies about so many different things. How does that impact the way we feel about the people we’re interacting with, who have professed opposite beliefs? Are we able to separate the person from some (or all) of their beliefs? These are incredibly modern questions that can act as gateways to this beautiful opera.

Can you talk about the conflict that is at the heart of the work?
I puritani opens with Elvira’s father granting her permission to marry somebody from the opposing faction. This is a remarkable bit of drama, seeing as there have been countless operas centered around the very conflict of papa not letting daughter marry someone from the “other side.” Romeo and Juliet, of course, is an obvious example. Giorgio, Elvira’s uncle, is able to persuade Gualtiero, Elvira’s father, that because Elvira is so miserable, wanting only to be with her beloved Arturo, he must give her permission – and he does. It’s extraordinary that the opera starts that way! So Bellini is already giving us a picture of these people that we’re not expecting. It opens the door to incredibly three-dimensional characters. Despite the opera’s solid bel canto form, these are people with robust and complicated emotional lives. The real conflict that arises is created by Arturo, and it literally drives Elvira crazy!

There’s a difficult choice facing Arturo, our tenor.
The opera begins with Elvira’s father granting his daughter permission to marry Arturo, and it seems like the couple, despite being from opposing sides of the Civil War, will live happily ever after. Their wedding has the power to bring together the supporters of Parliament and the Royalists. Unfortunately, not long after this happy news, Arturo is forced to choose between his allegiance to the crown and his love for Elvira. In the interest of good theater, Bellini has Arturo choose against Elvira: he saves Queen Enrichetta, rather than be true to his beloved. Once again, the opera deals with a timeless conflict through Arturo: that of the struggle between something outside of ourselves (be it country or profession) and something inside ourselves (love or family connection).

As a director, how do you create visual interest in this piece?
For me, it’s always about text and character and music. It’s also about really digging into each scene as if they were, on the surface, as dramatically rich as Puccini, Verdi, or even a 20th-century playwright. Within Bellini’s beautiful score are scenes that are rich, muscular, and complicated. While yes, historically an opera like I puritani has been about focusing on and featuring the voice, what’s exciting about this cast is that they’re all artists who want to dig into the scene beyond beautiful vocalism — to know why a musical phrase is repeated or why a certain text or musical change occurs and, most importantly, how can the drama influence the vocalism.

There’s a fascinating amount of text variation as the piece goes on, especially in large ensemble scenes. In many bel canto operas, the text of the soloists and chorus are the same. One of the most remarkable things in I puritani is the ensemble writing – in most large scenes, everyone (even within the chorus) is saying something different. This textual variety creates an amazingly three-dimensional world where everyone is reacting differently to the situation, as is truly human nature. All of this text difference is not always something that can be as clearly illustrated to the audience as it would be if you were looking at a score, but I believe that the variety of reactions and intentions will create a visceral and honest world on stage that has the potential to be incredibly gripping.
When the performance is over, try discussing it with your companions and any other opera lovers you know! You can continue your pleasure in I puritani for hours – even days – by exchanging ideas about it.

Here are some topics we can suggest:

- What elements of the music and drama were most intriguing in this production?
- This opera is famous for virtuosity, especially from the soprano and tenor, but it’s equally famous for soulful singing. Which do you prefer, the moments of grand vocal display or the more intimate moments?
- Why does Arturo make the decision to help Enrichetta escape instead of staying with his love, Elvira?
- Riccardo lets Arturo flee with Enrichetta. Several times we see this tension between fighting for one’s country and fighting for love. Why does Riccardo choose to aid this Royalist plan?
- Act Three contains Arturo’s aria “Credeasi, misera,” one of the most challenging tenor utterances in the entire operatic repertoire. What did you find most striking and impressive about this piece?
- In the end, the Puritans celebrate the love of Elvira and Arturo once the Royalists have been pardoned. Why was the acceptance of their love dependent on this?

What is your role here at Lyric, and how long have you held the position?

I came to Lyric nearly three and a half seasons ago, and am now senior director of production. I oversee the rehearsal and production departments, who are together responsible for a smooth on- and off-stage experience for all of our performing artists. Rehearsal organizes the daily schedules and obtains work visas, flights, apartments, doctor appointments, etc. The production department – which is home to Lyric’s top-notch stage managers, assistant directors, and assistant stage managers – ensures that rehearsals and performances are run efficiently, safely, and on time!

What led you to work at Lyric?

I was bitten by the opera bug when I was a child, so it has always been a goal to work in the field professionally. I started off at a Baroque opera festival in Austria and then worked for six years at the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, where I planned pre-concert talks, symposia, and the production of specialty series, most notably their wonderful “Beyond the Score” program, which toured all over the place. Plenty of the logistical challenges inherent to that job were transferrable back to the operatic line of work. Having admired Lyric for so many years from Michigan Avenue, I didn’t hesitate to put myself forward when this position opened up.

What’s a typical day like for you?

Urgencies are always crawling out of the woodwork, so we all learn to juggle and prioritize. I might be checking in on a visa application for an artist arriving next month, analyzing a request a director has made for a rehearsal day next week or next year, doing payroll, or interviewing people who may be a good fit for backstage life at Lyric when the next opportunity arises. I recently took on the coordination of coproduction agreements, which govern how we collaborate with other opera companies on shared work. This lets me spend some time each day researching and communicating about plans that are further down the line.

What’s the most challenging aspect of your job?

No amount of planning will ever prevent the flu from finding its way to a singer, or thunderstorms from cancelling incoming flights, or any number of other emergencies that could affect a rehearsal or even a performance. My rehearsal department colleagues and I are usually the first to hear of such things, and, with so many stakeholders both backstage and in the audience, it’s essential but not always intuitive to keep absolutely calm in the face of the unexpected. By bringing the right artistic and administrative colleagues together at the right times, we can find a solution for anything.

What keeps you committed to the work you do?

Being reminded with every performance that – when we’ve done our jobs right – there’s no better place for artists to express themselves, and no better place for audiences to fall in love with opera for the first or umpteenth time, than at the Lyric Opera House in Chicago.

What’s something about your job that people might not know?

I write contracts for animals that appear on stage. That includes the golden retrievers from last season’s production of The Magic Flute and the shih tzu from Der Rosenkavalier. If a director decides he or she wants an animal in a show, I come up with a strategy to find it, pay it, and then identify who will walk it, feed it, clean up after it…

Favorite Lyric moment?

I cherish the sounds of school-aged attendees at our student matinees. When the curtain rises, when Tosca stabs Scarpia, or – grab your earplugs – when two performers kiss onstage, there comes a howl from the audience that you could hear from the moon. It’s a group who is paying as close attention as is humanly possible to the stage and the music, and who will pave the future for all of us in this business.

Beyond opera, what are your other passions?

Getting outdoors. The opera house is bursting with people, drama, and artifice – all wonderful things – but for contrast I like to seek out places, preferably in hiking boots, with population: zero.

For one of them, classical music was a staple of childhood, laying the groundwork for a lifelong appreciation of opera. For the other, opera’s allure didn’t come until much later in life, but when it did, it came on stronger than Earth’s magnetic pull. Knowing anything about Howard and Barbara’s immense love of the art form, one would be hard pressed to guess which is which.

After being made concertmaster of the Civic Orchestra (the Chicago Symphony Orchestra’s professional training program) fresh out of high school, Howard was on track to be a fulltime professional violinist until the Army Air Corps came calling. When he returned to civilian life and opened an investment firm to support his family, Howard maintained his technique and achieved significant success as a solo and orchestral violinist both in the United States and abroad. In addition, he substituted for many years with the CSO under Maestros Solti and Barenboim.

His musical influence was far from homegrown. “We had no music in the family at all,” Howard says, “until I got the family going.” Howard learned the violin when a member of the community offered to teach group lessons for 25 cents a session at his grade school. Receiving permission from his mother to participate, Howard thus embarked on a relatively unusual career path for someone who found his first violin in the basement of his family’s apartment complex.

On the other hand and on the other side of the world, Barbara was immersed in a life of classical music from a very young age growing up in South Africa, where she would attend Sunday evening salons in the home of her opera-singer aunt. “As a five-year-old little girl I would sit crossed legged on the floor listening to either my cousins or visiting artists singing Schubert, Schumann, and Mahler lieder, so music was an integral part of my family’s life. The passion for opera continues in the family to this day and I have several young nieces throughout the world pursuing opera careers.” Although she took piano lessons, a career as a professional musician was not a personal ambition, but her appreciation and passion remains steadfast.

When Barbara and her family immigrated to the United States in 1974, choosing a new home rich in culture was vitally important. “I have attended Lyric Opera from the day I landed in this country, and I am absolutely thrilled to have this crown jewel on our doorstep. I also raised two sons whom I used to take to the opera; I actually took my youngest son to Carmen at Lyric when he was in nursery school. He knew the opera and he was in nursery school. He knew the opera from a DVD we had, which he and his older brother watched like they would watch Sesame Street and Mary Poppins. I remember bringing a pile of pillows to the opera house and he sat right through the entire performance totally mesmerized.”

Although he recalls possibly attending one live opera performance at the Auditorium Theater as a young boy, it wasn’t until he subbed in Lyric’s orchestra in the early nineties that Howard fell head over heels for opera. “It was one of the Russian operas, I can’t remember which one. It was impossibly crowded in the pit in those days, but the music was glorious and I remember falling in love with it right then and there. It became the passion of my life.”

Howard jumped in with both feet and began supporting Lyric and attending performances as a patron. He was invited to join the Board of Directors in 1996, and served on the Investment Committee for many years; he is presently an esteemed member of the Executive Committee.

Howard met Barbara around this same time, though oddly enough not at Lyric, but indeed because of their mutual passion for it. “We met through Howard’s sister-in-law,” Barbara recalls. “She was my very dear friend, and she was an opera singer with a beautiful soprano voice. We used to go to the opera together. She would tell me repeatedly that she wanted to introduce me to Howard because we were both so passionate about opera and classical music. And she did, and so it was through music that Howard and I connected.”

Many wonderful memories have marked Howard’s and Barbara’s nearly two decade-long friendship, since turned partnership, most especially Lyric’s 50th Anniversary Concert and Gala in 2004. “It was the most extraordinary experience,” Barbara says. “It was a two-day event, beginning with a dinner on Friday evening at the Casino Club where we had the great privilege to meet Regine Crespin, Carlo Bergonzi, and Marilyn Horne, among many others. We were seated at a table with Ms. Crespin, who proceeded to tell us the most delightful and amusing opera stories. One of them being a Tosca where she was on stage about to stab Scarpia, and she couldn’t get the dagger loose, so she whispered to him – in Italian, of course – ‘Die, die, die!’ We connected with her in a very profound way, and I corresponded with her for several years until her passing. To have met some of the greatest artists in the opera world was an unforgettable highlight for us.”

Howard sponsored his first opera the following year, the company premiere of Sir Michael Tippett’s The Midsummer Marriage, and he has been a member of the Production Sponsorship family ever since. Barbara joins him in what has become their favorite annual tradition. “It has been a great joy for us,” she says. “It is a major benefit, of course, to meet all the brilliant artists, because when you are so passionate about an art form, they are like your superheroes.”

Howard and Barbara are the superheroes in Lyric’s book, and the company in turn benefits from their extraordinary generosity and passion.

AMBER WAGNER

I can say without hesitation that my time in the Ryan Opera Center launched my singing career. I started the program as green as they come, and with the support of the coaching staff, Gianna Rolandi and Sir Andrew Davis, I was able to hone my craft and carve out a niche for myself that has allowed me to sing all over the world! I had some amazing moments on and off stage during my three-year tenure, but I would have to say my favorite was going on as Annina, Violetta’s maid, in La traviata. It was actually my Lyric stage debut, and Violetta was being sung by the amazing Renée Fleming! Getting to be on stage with her and watch her from the wings was indescribable—plus, I got my own dressing room with my name on the door! There are so many things I can say and share about this outstanding and remarkable program, the most important being THANK YOU! Thank you to everyone at Lyric for taking me on and giving me memories and opportunities that have completely changed my life!
