Lyric
Is there any composer who invigorates an opera audience more than Giuseppe Verdi? No Verdi score is graced more abundantly with unforgettable melodies than one of the greatest masterpieces of his “middle period,” Rigoletto. Whether you’re hearing this opera for the first or the hundredth time, you’ll have “La donna è mobile,” “Caro nome,” and all the other gems in your memory for days after the performance – they’re simply irresistible.

Like all the most popular Verdi works, Rigoletto has always been part of my operagoing life. From my very first experience of it to today, I’ve never failed to be riveted by the story of the hunchbacked court jester. It’s impossible to remain unmoved as we witness how this man’s desperate need to protect his innocent daughter and his overwhelming desire for revenge lead to tragic catastrophe for them both. Few characters in the repertoire make such a devastating impact as Rigoletto, and certainly there are few tenor cads as dangerously charming as the Duke of Mantua or ingénues more sweetly appealing than Gilda.

Only a truly extraordinary performer can make Rigoletto his signature role in the major opera houses of the world, and Lyric’s Ryan Opera Center alumnus Quinn Kelsey has been doing just that for the past six seasons. In performances from Oslo and Zurich to London, Toronto, and San Francisco, Quinn has sung and acted Rigoletto with both a power and a finesse that recall the greatest interpreters of this hugely challenging role. Many critics have placed him in the “royal line” of American Verdi baritones, from Lawrence Tibbett and Robert Merrill to Cornell MacNeil and Sherrill Milnes.

Joining Quinn onstage at Lyric is fellow Ryan Opera Center alumnus Matthew Polenzani, world-renowned as one of today’s most distinguished tenors, from whom we can anticipate a matchlessly elegant Duke of Mantua. A very eagerly awaited debut this season is that of our Gilda, the young Italian soprano Rosa Feola, who enchanted Chicago’s opera lovers in Falstaff for the Chicago Symphony Orchestra’s performances two seasons ago. I know hers will be one of the most impressive international careers of her generation. I’m also delighted at the prospect of two other exceptional debuts – the charismatic Ukrainian bass Alexander Tsymbalyuk (Sparafucile) and the captivating young Latvian mezzo-soprano Zanda Švēde (Maddalena).

Any Verdi production is immeasurably enhanced when it’s conducted by a musician whose affinity for the style is his birthright. That is certainly true of one of today’s most sought-after opera conductors, Marco Armiliato, who has been demonstrating his excellence in Verdi at the Metropolitan Opera for more than two decades, while also making his presence felt in Vienna, Zurich, Munich, and many other major houses. His collaboration with director E. Loren Meeker (who gave Lyric a dazzling Fledermaus a few seasons ago), enhanced by the strikingly original stage designs by Michael Yeargan, will yield a production in the great Lyric tradition – a classic Rigoletto for Lyric audiences to savor.
Lyric
From the Chairman

On behalf of the Board of Directors, I’m delighted to welcome you to Lyric Opera of Chicago.

This season is a particularly varied and distinctive one, launched with great anticipation by our opening production. Following Gluck’s exquisite Orphée et Eurydice in John Neumeier’s historic new production, our audiences can look forward to masterpieces of Italian opera in Verdi’s powerful Rigoletto, Puccini’s spectacular Tosca, and Bellini’s captivating I Puritani; French opera, with two highly contrasting works, Bizet’s exotic The Pearl Fishers and Gounod’s romantic Faust; a gem of the Mozart repertoire, Cosi fan tutte; and one of the most thrilling of all Wagner operas, Die Walküre, the second installment of Lyric’s monumental new Ring cycle.

Speaking personally, one of the most rewarding aspects of Lyric – not only as chairman, but as a longtime subscriber and patron – is my joy in introducing family, friends, and business colleagues to the company and the art form. I hope you’ll consider doing the same! When I receive out-of-town visitors during the opera season, I always try to include an evening at Lyric. It’s inevitably a major highlight of their stay.

A Lyric performance isn’t only an opportunity to dress up and go out with your significant other or with close friends for an elegant evening – it’s also an unforgettable and rewarding experience of timeless stories set to some of the world’s greatest music and performed by many of the top artists of our day.

Lyric’s mainstage productions are, of course, the core of every season we present. I also encourage you to explore the unique activities of Lyric Unlimited, our initiative focused on community engagement and education. It is one of the ways that the company stays relevant as a cultural service provider to all of Chicago, whether with newly commissioned works, community-created performances or the special programs presented in dozens of public schools all over Chicago every year. The level of creativity at work in Lyric Unlimited presentations has been truly inspiring, and it has exposed the art form of opera to tens of thousands of students across Chicagoland.

By presenting opera in new and non-traditional ways, Lyric Unlimited helps to grow and expand our audiences. I invite you to join me at one of the Lyric Unlimited performances of Fellow Travelers in March or Family Day at Lyric on April 7.

At Lyric, we truly cherish our donors and patrons. We consider each one of you as members of the Lyric family. It can sometimes be trite to declare, “Every gift counts,” but at Lyric it’s true: you’re going above and beyond what you’re paying for the ticket price. You’re investing in Lyric, entrusting that we will turn your gift into great art. We take that responsibility very seriously and are constantly imagining new ways to enhance your personal experience at Lyric, build new audiences for opera, and do it all in the most cost-effective way we can.

Many thanks to all of you who play a vital role in ensuring that our great art form and our great company continue to serve Chicago and the world of opera today and in the years to come.

General Director Anthony Freud reflects on his Lyric tenure to date

By Roger Pines
Onstage at Lyric, the great achievements of Anthony Freud’s initial seasons as general director have been many and varied. The repertoire has encompassed everything from Mozart and Wagner to Mieczysław Weinberg and Alban Berg.

“I’m proud that we’ve produced three iconic Mozart works in new productions with great theater directors,” Freud declares. “In their own different ways Robert Falls [Don Giovanni], Barbara Gaines [The Marriage of Figaro], and Neil Armfield [The Magic Flute] got us to the hearts of these elusive masterpieces, to a degree that I found particularly satisfying.”

Two less familiar works, one in its Lyric premiere and the other heard here in only three previous seasons, have been significant successes. “Dvořák’s Rusalka and Berg’s Wozzeck are recognized as two of the greatest works in the repertoire, but for different reasons they’re comparatively rarely performed,” notes Freud. “With both of those productions, the planets seemed beautifully aligned. It’s hard to think how we could have done them any better, in terms of music-making, theater-making, and the quality and consistency of the performances.”

Although new works are the highest-risk artistic and financial undertakings that opera companies can consider, Freud considers it their core responsibility to use new works to revitalize the repertoire. Recalling Lyric’s 60th-anniversary season (2014/15), Freud is justifiably proud that the company produced three world premieres. In their range and scope, these pieces sent a powerful message regarding Lyric’s stature as the great 21st-century opera company:

- Pepe Martínez and Leonard Foglia’s mariachi opera El Pasado Nunca Se Termina: “This was a Lyric Unlimited initiative with a commitment to building and developing relationships with particular communities – in Pasado’s case, the Mexican and Latino communities.”
- Wlad Marhulets and Stephanie Fleischmann’s klezmer opera The Property: “We took a piece presented on the mainstage – The Passenger – and complemented it with a new work, related both in its subject matter and, to a less obvious degree, its musical style.”
- Matthew Aucoin’s Second Nature: “This showed our commitment to providing a service to young people, which we did in an unexpected way. We engaged a brilliant young composer/poet/conductor and commissioned from him a story that wouldn’t automatically be associated with an opera for children, but which actually worked extraordinarily well. It engaged young audiences who saw it all over the city.”

The 2015/2016 season was highlighted by the much-acclaimed world premiere of Jimmy López and Nilo Cruz’s Bel Canto: “I made it clear to our composer and librettist that someone coming away from a performance of this opera shouldn’t be wondering why Ann Patchett’s extremely distinguished novel needed to be reinvented for the operatic stage. With our creative consultant, Renée Fleming, as curator, we successfully reinvented the novel rather than adapted it, earning its right to be an opera.”

Developing Bel Canto in collaboration with its creative team was a particularly exciting experience for Freud. The story (based on the Peruvian hostage crisis of two decades ago) had an unexpected topicality, presenting a challenge that Freud believes the company turned into an important element of the work’s success: “We were able to engage our audience in discourse about the subject matter, delving into some of the core issues.” Above all, Freud was thrilled that the opera scored so strongly with audiences: “So often new work can be distinguished, accomplished, a feather in the company’s cap, without actually being a popular hit. In Bel Canto we checked all the boxes. The icing on the cake was that, with the broadcast on PBS’s Great Performances, it brought Lyric back to television screens nationally for the first time in a quarter-century.”

During Freud’s tenure, the most important addition to Lyric’s annual performance schedule has been the presentation of a musical. In developing the company’s musical-theater initiative, his starting point was not to believe that opera companies should do musicals, “but instead, to consider repertoire suited to this company and this theater that would be of wide appeal to both current and new audiences.” Universally beloved shows by Rodgers and Hammerstein represented the right place to begin, in relation to those pieces’ popularity and what an opera company could bring to them.

“I think we’re a better opera company for having produced a series of musicals,” Freud asserts. “They’ve allowed us to learn a range of skills that pay dividends when we produce opera. The mechanics of musicals are generally more complicated than the mechanics of producing opera. Anybody who thinks the company can back-pedal its way through a production of a piece like The King and I couldn’t be more wrong! It takes all our skills, plus a wide range of new skills, to successfully produce these large pieces.”

The experience of producing Oklahoma!, The Sound of Music, Carousel, The King and I, and Lerner and Loewe’s My Fair Lady has taught Freud and his colleagues how title-specific Lyric’s ability to sell tickets for the musicals really is. As a result, it’s clear that “the number of titles from the classic musical-theater repertoire that could sustain a three- or four-week season in our 3,563-seat theater were few and far between. It also isn’t always possible to secure permission to do particular pieces when you want to do them – that limits our range of options still further. The more commercial the title, the harder it is to persuade the copyright owners to allow you to produce it.”

The fact remains that musicals have become a vital part of expanding Lyric’s audience, while providing an income stream that helps support the mainstage opera season. “We need to find a way of exploring repertoire beyond the classic titles,” says Freud. “That’s what led us to the decision to do Jesus Christ Superstar this season. I’m extraordinarily excited about it. This show takes us in a new direction that I hope will be artistically very satisfying. It also opens up the possibility of reaching audiences for whom that iconic piece has been life-changing. I know they’ll be excited to revisit it on a grand scale at Lyric.”

Freud’s tenure has also encompassed many special events.
beyond opera productions. He’s been particularly enthused by Lyric’s collaboration with The Second City, developed by Renée Fleming, which he considers “a landmark in changing Lyric’s profile, its online presence, and perceptions about Lyric specifically and opera in general.” Freud vividly recalls the night in January 2013 when The Second City Guide to the Opera made its debut: “Tickets were in such demand that we had to floor over the orchestra pit in order to add extra seats into the auditorium! We had Renée and Sir Patrick Stewart onstage, alongside the Second City ensemble, artists from Lyric’s Ryan Opera Center, and musicians from our orchestra.”

That success resulted in Lyric running the cabaret version onstage for a month, during the course of which Freud and his colleagues discovered that “here in the opera house we actually have our own studio theater – the house’s stage itself, which worked so well on that occasion and then for Jane Lynch’s See Jane Sing a few seasons later.” Freud was thrilled again by The Second City’s return to Lyric in 2016 for Longer! Louder! Wagner!, which proved a wonderful way of generating excitement about Lyric’s new Ring cycle.

The Second City performances have been presented under the auspices of Lyric Unlimited, the company’s hugely successful initiative devoted to community-engagement and education projects, which was launched in 2012. As Lyric Unlimited moves from a youth to an adolescent, so to speak, “we constantly need to reinvent it and find ways of taking it in new directions,” Freud declares. “Its multi-year, multifaceted Chicago Voices initiative, for example, encapsulated the concept of ‘Hear Chicago Sing,’ taking as a starting point the desire to celebrate the history of Chicago music-making and the inherent creativity of Chicago communities. It was a groundbreaking idea, expanded from Renée Fleming’s ‘American Voices’ at the Kennedy Center and taken by Renée and Lyric Unlimited to new heights. It’s very true to our mission.” Freud does want to ensure that there is minimal “mission drift” in the projects we commit to: “Lyric Unlimited is designed to take us in completely new directions, some of which are radically new, but we should always understand why it’s a great opera company that is undertaking these projects.”

The special challenge Freud will face in coming seasons is to find a way of operating in a business environment that is more volatile and unpredictable than ever before. That fact has to be viewed in the context of an art form and an organization that are accustomed to very long, inflexible planning cycles. This challenge, both conceptually and practically, is something Freud and his colleagues are working tirelessly to solve, while delivering opera productions that stimulate audiences with all the excitement they’ve come to expect from Lyric.

Freud has felt gratified and invigorated not only by what has transpired onstage, but also by the manner in which Lyric has evolved as a business. “If you go back ten years,” he explains, “you see that Lyric’s line of business was essentially our annual opera season. Our ownership of the opera house now enables us to identify additional opportunities that increase our breadth and depth of cultural service. It’s now understood that we have five lines of business, and we’re developing a business model to support them. That’s a radical new way of thinking about this arts organization!”

The five lines of business are mainstage opera, Lyric Unlimited, the Ryan Opera Center, the musicals, and what the company now refers to as “presentations and events” – the use of the opera house for a whole range of different activities. It seemed to Freud that “our ownership of the opera house, which is so rare among U.S. companies, was something we hadn’t developed fully as an opportunity, both in a more conventional way – concerts by great classical artists, such as Lang Lang and Itzhak Perlman – and rock concerts and comedy shows, to something like the James Beard Awards, which took place in May at the opera house for the third consecutive year. All of this can change how Lyric is perceived around the city. The fact that this is a building you can come to not just for Lyric productions but also for a Smashing Pumpkins concert makes people aware around the city of what a resource the opera house is.”

One product of Freud’s first year in the job was the initiation of a strategic-planning process, in which the management and board worked together to ask the basic questions: Who are we? Why are we here? Where do we want to go, and how do we want to get there? “Without wanting to seem too jargon-y,” Freud explains, “we determined that the three core pillars on which our organization was built were artistic excellence, relevance, and fiscal responsibility. Constantly redefining what each of those pillars means is the heart of my job. What constituted fiscal responsibility when we were selling out on subscription is very different from what constitutes fiscal responsibility in a much less predictable business environment.”

Freud makes clear that “understanding our communities, our society, how the world we’re a part of can change culturally, socially, politically, technologically, and understanding how we as an organization can achieve the greatest possible relevance to the greatest number of people, is a constantly evolving concept.” He applies the same standard to artistic excellence: “Our job is to deliver to our audiences the most exciting, stimulating, entertaining experiences imaginable, while our audience’s reference points are constantly changing. We have to understand this in planning repertoire and productions.” One example Freud gives is Bel Canto, “which would have been perceived in a completely different way three or four years previously. The fact that the Paris attacks took place two weeks before the world premiere completely changed the way the piece was perceived.”

Every general director of a performing-arts company has dreams of what he’d like his or her company to present onstage, and Freud is no exception. In looking to the future, he has some very specific dreams – early Verdi, for example. He’s also well aware that “in recent years we haven’t done enough Janáček and Britten – to me, both of those composers are absolutely in the royal blood line of great operatic geniuses.”

Freud adores living in Chicago, although when he’s in town (the job requires a good deal of travel in America and abroad), his devotion to Lyric leaves him comparatively little time for other pursuits. “I learned quite early in my career as a general director that a life/work balance was an ephemeral concept in this job, and that actually work was – is – life. It’s impossible to ration your time and your energy in a job like this, since it makes extraordinary demands. If you’re as lucky as I am to have a very understanding and patient husband, a former opera singer and artist manager and currently a freelance dramaturg, then this job becomes possible and sustainable, as well as a life-changing experience that defines how you think and how you live.”

ACT THREE

ACT ONE
Scene 1. The Duke of Mantua boasts to a courtier, Borsa, about his most recent infatuation. A girl has enchanted the Duke, but ultimately it makes no difference to him whether he pursues one woman or another. Wishing to select one with whom to spend the evening, he surveys the court and settles upon the Countess Ceprano just as the court jester Rigoletto mocks her husband. Another courtier, Marullo, arrives with surprising news to share with his fellow courtiers: Rigoletto has a mistress. In the meantime, the Duke and Rigoletto discuss several unscrupulous methods of disposing of superfluous husbands. Realizing that he is the object of Rigoletto's sarcasm, Count Ceprano arranges for a midnight meeting with some of the courtiers to obtain vengeance. The party is interrupted by the arrival of the nobleman Monterone, who storms in to denounce the Duke for dishonoring his daughter. He curses the Duke, and when mocked viciously by Rigoletto, Monterone turns on the jester and curses him as well.

Scene 2. Brooding over Monterone's curse, Rigoletto returns to the secluded house where he shields his daughter, Gilda, from the licentiousness of the Duke's court. Sparafucile, a professional assassin, confronts Rigoletto and offers to help should Rigoletto ever wish to rid himself of an enemy. Once alone, Rigoletto muses on the similarity of their professions – Rigoletto wounding others with his wit, while Sparafucile uses a knife.

Rigoletto returns home and greets his daughter, Gilda, declaring that she means the world to him. She reciprocates his feelings but questions why he has kept her concealed. He fears the courtiers and warns the housekeeper, Giovanna, to guard Gilda carefully. Hearing a noise in the street, he goes out to investigate. Gilda confesses to Giovanna that she loves a young man who has followed her home every day after church. The Duke, who has been eavesdropping on the scene, steps out of hiding and declares his love, identifying himself as Gualtier Maldè, a penniless student. Hearing footsteps, he rushes off, leaving Gilda thinking lovingly of his name.

The courtiers appear, ready to abduct Rigoletto's supposed mistress. Rigoletto surprises them by returning, but Marullo convinces him that they are planning to abduct the wife of Count Ceprano, who lives nearby. Rigoletto falls into their trap and in the confused darkness he doesn't realize that it is Gilda who has been kidnapped until she cries out to her father as she is carried off. Realizing the trick too late, Rigoletto cries, “Ah, the curse!”

ACT TWO
The Duke, unaware of the kidnapping, laments the fact that when he returned to Gilda's house he found it deserted. When the courtiers tell him of the abduction, he rejoices that the girl is now in the palace. Rigoletto appears, feigning nonchalance. Once it becomes clear to him that Gilda must be with the Duke, he desperately tries to reach her, but the courtiers hold him back. His fury dissolves into a bereft father's pleading. Gilda bursts into the scene and Rigoletto orders the courtiers to leave him alone with his daughter. Gilda confesses that she loves the Duke and begs her father to forgive him. As Monterone appears on his way to prison, Rigoletto swears that they both will be avenged.

ACT THREE
Rigoletto has brought Gilda to Sparafucile's inn to prove the Duke's faithlessness. As they lurk in the darkness, the Duke swaggers in. After proclaiming the fickleness of women, he charms Maddalena, Sparafucile's sister. As the flirtation progresses, Rigoletto tries to comfort his despairing daughter. He orders her to return home, disguise herself as a boy, and meet him in Verona. After striking a bargain with Sparafucile for the Duke's murder, he departs.

Gilda, unwilling to follow her father's orders, returns to the inn and overhears Maddalena begging her brother to spare the handsome stranger's life. Sparafucile agrees to deceive Rigoletto by substituting the corpse of the next person who appears at the inn. Determined to sacrifice herself so the Duke may live, Gilda becomes Sparafucile's next victim.

Rigoletto returns and is given a sack containing a body. Hearing the Duke's voice in the distance, he frantically cuts open the bag and finds his dying daughter. Begging her father's forgiveness, she dies. Rigoletto cries out once more, “Ah, the curse!”

Verdi’s Rigoletto is one of those unusual 19th-century Italian operas not principally built around a romantic love story. It’s questionable whether the term “love story” even applies to it: although Gilda certainly loves the Duke, he forgets all about Gilda once he’s seduced her. The relationship that really matters in Rigoletto is of another sort entirely: that between a father and a daughter. In this respect Verdi and his librettist Piave directly followed their model, Victor Hugo’s drama Le roi s’amuse, which served as the opera’s source; Hugo himself insisted on the crucial nature of the parent-child relationship in his play.

The focus on a parent and a child isn’t unusual for Verdi. In fact, the parent-child relationship has long been recognized as an element shared by a large number of Verdi’s operas. In some, like Rigoletto, it plays a fundamental role in the working out of the plot; Luisa Miller, La traviata, I vespri siciliani, Simon Boccanegra, Don Carlo, and Aida are among the better-known works falling into this category. Those exploring Verdi’s earlier and lesser-known works will discover still further examples: Oberto, I Lombardi, I due Foscari, Alzina, Giovanna d’Arco, I masnadieri, and Stiffelio all engage with the complex relationships between parents and their children – the peculiarly forceful tension arising from deep, unconditional love on the one hand and the conflicting impulses and points of view of different generations.

That already makes for a considerable number of Verdian parents. Within this large group of parental roles, mothers are outnumbered by fathers by a fair margin, but their presence is far from negligible if we add to the “real” mothers (Amelia in Un ballo in maschera, Alice Ford in Falstaff) the quasi-maternal figures of Azucena (Manrico believes she is his mother right until he’s put to death at the end of Il trovatore) and Elisabetta in Don Carlo (she starts out as the title character’s betrothed and ends up his stepmother), as well as those works in which absent mothers are invoked by characters onstage (Lina’s mother in Stiffelio, Gilda’s mother in Rigoletto, and Desdemona’s mother in Otello, all of them unnamed).

Such a dense concentration of operatic parents and children in Verdi is all the more striking for its being unusual within the Italian repertoire overall. How many mothers or fathers are there in such standard works as The Barber of Seville, L’elisir d’amore, La bohème, Tosca, or Pagliacci? Precisely none. A more important point is that Verdi’s predilection for plots with parents and children cannot possibly be coincidental. Unlike many composers of preceding generations (often obligated to set to music, willy-nilly, whatever librettos were placed before them by tyrannical impresarios), Verdi through most of his career exercised the highest degree of control over the subjects of his operas. He himself selected most of these stories for operatic treatment, and often playing a dominant role in shaping the dramatic contours of his works, imperiously issuing orders to his librettists. If so many Verdi operas feature parent/child conflict, it can only have been because he found such stories compelling – but why?
Several commentators delving into the composer’s biography have contented themselves with a psychological explanation, typically zeroing in on Verdi’s tragic loss of his two infant children in the late 1830s (followed by his wife’s death in 1840). Indeed, it’s difficult to imagine that Verdi wouldn’t have thought back to this painful period when composing music for the grief-stricken fathers of Luisa Miller, Rigoletto, and Simon Boccanegra. Readers of Mary Jane Phillips Matz’s definitive biography of the composer will also know of the deeply conflictual relationship between Verdi and his own father, who for a time actually found himself booted from the home he’d been sharing with his by-then famous son. It’s tempting to conclude, as many have done, that Verdi’s parent-child works are subconscious attempts to work out his own painful experiences as both father and son. Armchair psychoanalysis can be fascinating, especially in the case of such a richly complex figure as Verdi, but the validity of the conclusions reached is as difficult to prove as to disprove. A more serious objection is that such an approach risks oversimplification of Verdi’s art. A purely psychological explanation fails to take account of the paradoxical artistic premise of opera itself: that it is at once a drama and a musical composition.

Musical description, particularly when it gets technical, is apt to be off-putting to those unfamiliar with pitches, keys, and other concepts and terms best learned through notation – a closed book even for many devoted opera goers. But the concepts in themselves aren’t difficult to grasp. Rigoletto happens to provide an ideal proving ground for exploring how the musical aspects of parent/child relationships can be just as important as the personal ones.

The first point to consider is obvious: young voices are naturally pitched higher than older voices. Rooted in physiology, vocal range therefore has long been enlisted as a realistic means of suggesting the age of certain characters. Casting sopranos and tenors as an opera’s youthful protagonists, while reserving lower-register singers (bass or baritone for men, contraltos or mezzo-sopranos for women), became a standard procedure during the 19th century, though there were notable exceptions. Moreover, tenors and sopranos are able sing the same melody on the same notes, albeit an octave apart, while a father will be differentiated vocally by being sung in a lower register, by either a baritone (Rigoletto, La traviata, Aida) or a bass (Luisa Miller, Don Carlo). This registral contrast is also often matched by thematic contrast: the two vocal lines in a duet involving a parent and a child may have different rhythms and melodic contours, rather than sharing identical material.

Let’s explore how these abstract notions play out in Rigoletto’s three magnificent father/daughter duets, one in each act, which may be said to provide the basic pillars supporting the opera. Each duet is marked by dramatic and musical contrast. The importance of duets in this opera was stressed by Verdi in a letter of 1852, when he was asked to alter the score for an upcoming performance including the soprano Teresa de Giuli. The specific request was to insert an additional aria for Gilda. Verdi refused, explaining that it would be impossible to introduce another aria into a work he’d conceived “almost without arias, without [grand] finales, an endless string of duets.” He was exaggerating, of course (the opera includes four important solo vocal numbers, as well as the stunning quartet and trio of Act Three) – but not by much. The unusual structure of Act One features three consecutive duets (Rigoletto/Sparafucile, Rigoletto/Gilda, Gilda/Duke), and the Rigoletto/Gilda duets of Acts Two and Three crystallize further key emotional highpoints. Duets outnumbering solo arias, as happens here, would have been unimaginable in a work by Rossini who, with all of his Romantic verve, retained the emphasis on solo singing that he'd inherited from Baroque opera.

In the first Rigoletto/Gilda duet, the highly expressive passage in which Rigoletto begs his daughter not to question him further about her mother is entirely absent from Gilda’s part. Conversely, later in the same duet Gilda’s sympathetic observations about her father’s loving concern for her are set to music sung only by her, not by Rigoletto. Verdi must have instinctively felt that such distinctive themes were integral to individual characterization; they couldn’t be shared by the two roles, but belonged exclusively to one or the other. The baritone/soprano vocal pairing thus enhances a differentiation that is simultaneously dramatic and musical.

Contrast that duet with the one that directly follows, between Gilda and the Duke, starting with the astonishing moment of the Duke’s entrance. Gilda has just confessed to her servant, Giovanna, that she’s in love with a handsome young man she saw in church; she’s unaware that the Duke is attentively eavesdropping. Then comes the first of two important moments in Rigoletto when Gilda begins a word without finishing it (the second such moment is easier to catch because it’s more exposed: at the end of the opera, Gilda dies before being able to eke out the final syllable of the phrase “per voi pregherò,” “I will pray for you”). Now, at the point of the Duke’s surprising entrance into her home, Gilda doesn’t sing the last syllable of the phrase “E l’alma in estasi gli dice t’amo” (“My soul in ecstasy says to him, ‘I love you’”), but for a different reason: he interrupts her, singing the complete word “t’amo” (“I love you”) on the exact same note where he herself was clearly headed. This inspired idea could only have been realized with two high voices, in this case soprano and tenor.

The Act Two Rigoletto/Gilda duet bears a strong resemblance to their first duet, again pitting the baritone’s paternal sternness against the soprano’s youthful impetuosity. The dramatically significant difference is that this duet occurs after the disaster of Gilda being seduced by the Duke. The duet therefore concludes with Rigoletto vowing vengeance on the Duke, while Gilda pleads for pity on his behalf. Here, in contrast to their previous duet, their different words are sung to the same melodic theme, but – necessarily – in different keys, forcing Verdi into abrupt modulations as the cabaletta shifts from baritone- to soprano-dominated lines. Thematically they’re placed in symmetrical opposition, but tonally the generational divide, which will lead to the final tragedy, is fully apparent.

In their final, emotionally devastating duet, father and daughter are in close physical proximity but miles apart psychologically. Utterly distraught, Rigoletto begs his dying daughter not to abandon him, while the gently resigned Gilda will only assure him that in heaven, where she’ll be reunited with her mother, they’ll pray for him. Her soaring lines and his desperate pleas are not only strikingly differentiated thematically, but lie at opposite vocal poles.

It’s worth noting that the baritone voice type is not to be found within the first two centuries of operatic history, but was largely a 19th-century development: for many years previously, it was simply a particular sort of bass, situated towards the higher end of that range. Historically, Verdi’s works were crucial in carving out a special place for the baritone as its own distinct category. This was partly due to the composer’s fondness for certain singers, most notably Felice Varesi, the first Rigoletto, for whom Verdi had already written Macbeth (1847), and for whom he would
In this opera, curses and seduction lead an overbearing parent, Rigoletto, to lose his own daughter, Gilda. A headstrong daughter outsmarting her protective parent isn’t unique to Verdi. In fact, this same idea applies rather prominently in the well-loved Disney animated feature, Tangled. It seems Gilda and Rapunzel have more in common than overbearing parents!

For starters, Rigoletto and Mother Gothel (Rapunzel’s captor/guardian) take parenting to the next level; Gilda’s only allowed to leave the house for church, while Rapunzel is constantly locked in an isolated tower. The women’s isolation doesn’t last forever, due to two seductive men: The Duke of Mantua and Flynn Rider. In Rigoletto, the Duke meets Gilda at church, and they promptly fall in love. The Duke’s men abduct Gilda from her isolation and bring her to his palace, where – after proclaiming his love for her – he proceeds to seduce and then abandon her. When Flynn Rider appears in Tangled, he charms Rapunzel by helping her escape from the tower, freeing her of Mother Gothel, and taking her to the castle where she can finally see the floating lanterns.

While love is blossoming in both of these stories, they then take solemn turns for the worse. Rigoletto, discovering what’s happened between Gilda and the Duke, hires a hit man to murder the Duke. Likewise, Mother Gothel learns of Flynn and Rapunzel’s rendezvous and sends men to capture Flynn. These dire situations lead the two women to make the ultimate sacrifices of love. Gilda, in an attempt to save the Duke, sacrifices her own life to the hit man. Similarly, Rapunzel agrees to a lifetime of captivity with Mother Gothel in exchange for Flynn’s life. While Rigoletto ends with the death of Gilda, Tangled has a happier ending where Mother Gothel dies and Flynn and Rapunzel live to be married.

Yet, these dire situations could have been avoided if the overbearing parents weren’t caught up in themselves. When Rigoletto is cursed by Count Monterone, his terror leads him into taking drastic measures. Mother Gothel kidnapped Rapunzel for her magical hair, which could make Mother Gothel stay young forever. Had these two parents focused more on their children and less on their own obsessions, perhaps the outcomes would be different.

Modern Match – Rigoletto

write Germont in La traviata two years after Rigoletto.

The common-sense explanation of why Rigoletto is a baritone (because Verdi was writing music for a father) should not exclude the reverse possibility: that Verdi chose stories about fathers because he was so intrigued by the expressive potential of the baritone voice, both on its own and in juxtaposition with a tenor son or a soprano daughter, with all the rich musical expansion this permitted. The supreme artistic result has everything to do with why Rigoletto has long been regarded as one of Verdi’s great leaps forward.

A Talk with the Director

Rigoletto director E. Loren Meeker, in conversation with Lyric dramaturg Roger Pines.

What does Rigoletto have to say to audiences today?
Two universal areas of interest make Rigoletto relevant to a modern audience. First are the powerful, intrinsically human themes – the deeply rooted desire for love, man’s fascination with money, corruption of power, and the duality of human nature (good vs. evil). We struggle with these issues in our fragile world today as much as humanity did when Rigoletto was composed.

The second connection acknowledges that the political environment of Rigoletto feels eerily similar to the world we currently live in. Every audience member can probably think of a present day government where issues surrounding money, sex, and corruption are systematic: Do we trust our leaders? What are they doing with their time and their money? How are they treating the people – especially the women – around them? How do people take their power and use it to influence the world and people around them?

Looking at these large, overarching issues makes me say, why wouldn’t we be telling this story now? It speaks to who we are as humans, trying to craft our lives towards our good or evil tendencies. Which side of the coin ultimately wins?

You choreographed Rigoletto early in your career, and now you’re directing it. What are you discovering about the opera this time around?
Each time I encounter an opera, I bring new life experience and perspective to my career, and now you’re directing it. What are you discovering about the opera this time around?

What traits in Rigoletto himself are you most interested in exploring?
He’s the clearest depiction of an ambivalent character – someone who struggles with the two sides of his nature. This struggle stems from the environment he lives in.

In Rigoletto’s time, society limited working opportunities for someone from the lower class, especially someone who would have been considered “deformed.” Playing a court jester grates on him. He’s tortured by his personal frustrations and by the court itself. His hatred for his lot in life, and what society has made him, makes him more cynically abusive as a jester rather than verbally funny. He considers his barbed tongue as fierce a weapon as Sparafucile’s knife.

As the dark side of his nature gets progressively stronger (by the end of the first scene he mocks a father whose daughter has been sexually abused), he has to fight harder to keep the good elements in his life safely hidden from the world’s evils. Fatherly love is as honest an emotion for Rigoletto as the cynical side that we see from him as the abused jester, but it’s a catch-22: his desire to keep Gilda pure and safe, to keep her from knowing that the world she lives in is harsh, violent, and predatory, is the very thing that causes her to rebel. Exploring these extremes within the character is vital.

What are the greatest challenges in staging Rigoletto?
My primary focus is to bring Verdi’s characters to life in as charged an atmosphere as possible. Working with such a great libretto means that as a team of artists we must intensely focus on bringing the text to life. Scenes can be crafted in a way that allows the audience to have an inside window into the emotional soul of each of character, especially in the ensemble scenes.

I also enjoy activating large chorus scenes. Working with a group as strong as the Lyric chorus allows me to create individual, nuanced performances. The chorus scenes are not static in Rigoletto! Looking at the musical structure, the text, and the setting reveals environments that are ripe with activity – sometimes large and chaotic like the opening scene, at other times boiling with subtle tension like a gang or mob, as with the kidnapping scene.

What can you tell us about Michael Yeargan’s sets and Constance Hoffman’s costumes?
Michael and Constance were interested in creating a world that stayed away from a more traditional dark, black, and heavy setting. They challenged themselves to find another way to tell the story. While conceiving the production, they were examining different ways the Renaissance era was depicted over time. They became fascinated with 1940s films – you’ll see this influence clearly represented in the costumes. They were also researching surrealist painters, and Giorgio de Chirico captured their imagination. His color palette and architectural style are strong influences on the scenic design, creating a very stylized world. The production feels abstract and surprisingly colorful, full of harsh angles and bold colors that help bring the characters to life.
Rigoletto: After the Curtain Falls

When the performance is over, try discussing it with your companions and any other opera lovers you know! You can continue your pleasure in Rigoletto for hours – even days – by exchanging ideas about it. Here are some topics we can suggest:

- What elements of the production captivated you? Why?
- The Duke of Mantua is a womanizer. Why is he permitted to behave this way? Does his social status allow him to be so lascivious?
- Rigoletto is very superstitious, and he worries about the curse placed upon him. What superstitions do you have? In the end, is what happens to Rigoletto’s daughter due to the curse, as he proclaims, or is it just coincidence?
- Why does Rigoletto keep Gilda’s existence a secret? And why does he keep her from knowing his name?
- Rigoletto contemplates the similarities between himself and Sparafucile, the hired assassin. Sparafucile stabs men with a knife, and Rigoletto with his sharp tongue. What is Verdi hinting at here?
- The assassin, Sparafucile, is an intriguing character, who doesn’t have an aria. Had Verdi written one for him, what do you think it would have been about?

Gilda in male disguise, as portrayed by the exquisite Italian soprano Amelia Galli-Curci, an idol of Chicago audiences from 1916 to 1924.

To continue enjoying Rigoletto, Lyric dramaturg Roger Pines suggests the following performances:

- CD – Renata Scotto, Fiorenza Cossotto, Alfredo Kraus, Ettore Bastianini, Ivo Vinco; Chorus and Orchestra of the Maggio Musicale Fiorentino, cond. Gianandrea Gavazzeni (Andromeda)

Lyric Opera of Chicago
What is your role here at Lyric, and how long have you held the position?
I've been the director of music administration since November 2016, but I've held various positions at Lyric since 2001. My department and I work with the chorus, orchestra, dancers, and assistant conductors to provide day-to-day operational and personnel support for these groups – about 300 people. We also handle their auditions and casting, ensuring that we have the best artists for the season.

What led you to work at Lyric?
I've been involved in music, dance and theater most of my life and graduated with a degree in vocal performance and a minor in theater. Lyric is, and has always been, at the top of the pack in the opera world and once I moved to Chicago, I was determined to work here. I was auditioning for young-artist programs, traveling for competitions, and trying to find a job with enough flexibility to allow me to continue doing it. I decided that I would like to pursue a career in arts management while working as a receptionist for Lyric. During my tenure here, I have moved into several other roles including artist services, wigs/make-up, accounts payable, and payroll. Once I completed my master's degree, a position opened in the operations department, I became the music administration assistant…and the rest is history!

What's a typical day like for you?
My day is extremely varied, but one thing that doesn't fluctuate is that I'm always working with people. I love problem solving and there are so many little puzzle pieces that need to come together with individual performers and/or other departments. Otherwise, I could be doing anything from serving on an audition panel, making sure conductors have what they need for rehearsals, getting budget numbers together for a future season, or helping to make sure that the offstage musicians are in the right place for the best sound.

What's the most challenging aspect of your job?
During the season, there are a lot of very long work days where it's important that I manage my time well and stay on schedule. This can be a big challenge because things have a tendency to “pop up.” Another challenge is making sure everyone stays on the same page when a last-minute change occurs. Dozens of people can be affected by even the smallest change, so communication is key and something we are always trying to improve upon.

What keeps you committed to the work you do?
I love the arts and I love opera. I think what we do is vital because it brings us cultural awareness and connects us to our humanity. That's a very special thing, and a worthwhile cause. I would also say that I really couldn't ask for better colleagues. We are here out of a deep love for what we do and the common goal of putting something special on stage.

What's something about your job that people might not know?
One thing people might not know is that if you attend dress rehearsals, I am the person sitting just behind the conductor and a few seats from the cover conductor. I sit there to ensure that all goes well with our musical groups and it allows me to jump in at a moment's notice if I'm needed.

A favorite Lyric moment?
Over the years, the thing that stands out above all of the on stage events are the lifelong friendships I've made. Some are people I've met here, some have moved on to other jobs in other cities, some are friends from other opera companies. A job where you can share common interests with almost all of your colleagues, and those common interests are directly related to what you do on a daily basis is pretty unique and makes for a lot of amazing opportunities to connect with people.

Beyond opera, what are your other passions?
I love to travel and I would love more opportunities to see the world. I'm a diehard foodie and I love to cook…and eat. Okay, mostly eat. Aside from that, a good book and a good movie – I love a good story and an opportunity to exercise a little escapism.

In Memory of Nancy W. Knowles:

Let the Music be Heard

The Lyric family is deeply saddened by the loss of Nancy W. Knowles, who served on Lyric’s Board of Directors and Executive Committee from 1998 until her passing on August 26, 2017. She was an extraordinary woman, a consummate professional, and an outstanding philanthropist, who possessed great strength and character, and was passionate in her devotion to the arts. In memory of her many dedicated years of service to Lyric, we are honored to reprint this patron salute that originally appeared in the 2007/08 season program of La bohème.

— Anthony Freud,
Lyric’s General Director, President & CEO

Music. Hearing. One is impossible without the other. Music must be heard to exist, and the ear must hear music, whether in its traditional sense or in the rhythm and lil of speech or animal sounds or even construction noise. Separate a culture from its music, and it tends to disintegrate. Take away a person’s sense of hearing, and a huge void remains where the music used to be.

That sort of tragedy for years motivated Nancy W. Knowles, former chairman emerita of Knowles Electronics Holdings, Inc. Twenty-two years out of college, having worked in such diverse industries as veterinary vaccines, mining, and apparel, Nancy came to the Chicago area to work for Hugh Knowles, the founder of Knowles Electronics, Inc. With no knowledge of the sub-miniature electronic hearing instrument components manufactured there for hearing-aid companies, she started in new-product development, “surrounded by engineers and physicists.” Charged with being a set of “new eyes,” she proceeded to learn the business through listening, observing, and questioning.

No stranger to intellectual pursuits and distinguished relatives, Nancy Welch Knowles grew up in Fort Dodge, Iowa, in a home filled with classical music. Her father, an orthopedic physician, invented a pin used in setting broken hips. He also delighted in driving the family 100 miles to attend opera in Des Moines. At home, “he had a record collection of 78s – the big ones – that was huge, hundreds and hundreds of records.” Nancy’s college degree in Spanish earned her several positions as a translator, in the course of which she became familiar with various types of businesses and corporate structures. This breadth of experience served her well in meeting the challenges of Knowles Electronics.

Hugh’s instincts, as usual, proved accurate. Nancy found the learning process exhilarating: “It was wonderful. I absolutely loved it.” In a win-win scenario, Nancy found her calling, and Hugh gained valuable insight from an intelligent and reliable consultant. After working closely for five years, and sometimes traveling together, Nancy and Hugh, a widower for ten years, married. They were a well-suited couple and very happy together, but misfortune intruded when, a year later, Hugh suffered a serious stroke.

In the eight years remaining of Hugh’s life, Nancy was his eyes and ears at the plant. He remained president and chairman, with executives often coming to the house. Nancy went to the office each day and discussed issues with Hugh in the evening. He respected her opinion and was satisfied that the business would be in capable hands without him. She was vice chairman while Hugh was alive and was voted chairman after his death, though she shared control with his son and two daughters, and hired professional managers to run the firm. Some eleven years later, most of the company’s stock was sold and its name changed to Knowles Electronics Holdings, Inc.

Nancy assumed the presidency of The Knowles Foundation, a private entity established in 1955 by Hugh and his first wife, which supports the arts, education, health, international development, and social services. Soon afterward, she became involved with Lyric Opera, indulging her lifelong love of the music with which she was raised. Guild Board member Gene Andersen invited her onto the Guild Board, and the next year, as part of Lyric’s massive Building on Greatness Capital Campaign purchase and renovation project, The Knowles Foundation generously provided an assistive listening system for the refurbished auditorium, later named the Ardis Krainik Theatre. Of her affiliation with Knowles Electronics, Nancy observed, “To be able to help millions and millions of people around the world is astounding.” For the Lyric patrons needing it, the new listening system from The Knowles Foundation has been no less astounding.

The enthusiasm with which Nancy approached her work was demonstrated also in her philanthropic zeal. Through The Knowles Foundation, as well as generous personal gifts, she has benefited institutions the world over, especially those involving hearing as an important element. As a result of her being inspired by the late Sam Wanamaker, for example, Shakespeare’s Globe in London boasts the Nancy W. Knowles Theatre, a venue for presentations and discussions. She served on a number of boards and joined Lyric’s Board of Directors in 1998 at the behest of fellow director, the late Frank Considine.

In 2007 Nancy bestowed an endowment gift to Lyric, in honor of which the reception area just east of the Daniel F. and Ada L. Rice Grand Foyer was designated the Nancy W. Knowles Lobby. It is appropriate for opera goers anticipating a superb listening experience to be welcomed into the Lyric Opera House by the name of an elegant woman so intimately connected with the art of preserving and enhancing the human sense of hearing. Lyric Opera is grateful that Nancy’s legacy will impact Chicago for generations to come.

Helen and Sam Zell are passionate supporters of Chicago’s vibrant cultural scene. They are longtime subscribers to Lyric Opera and have contributed to the Annual Campaign for many years. Helen and Sam have cosponsored several new productions, most recently the first two installments of Lyric’s new Ring cycle, Das Rheingold (2016/17) and this season’s Die Walküre.

Join the best wineries, collectors, and sommeliers as we celebrate 30 years of wine, women, and song.

A project of the Women’s Board, this marquee fundraiser auctions some of the world’s greatest wines, luxury trips to exotic locales, and one-of-a-kind experiences, all from The Ken Pigott Stage of the historic Ardis Krainik Theatre!

2018 Honored Guest Winery: Château Margaux
2018 Honoree: Shirley Welsh Ryan

Donations of rare and fine wines, champagnes and spirits, rooms in five-star hotels, and luxury gift items are appreciated at this time. Please contact the Women’s Board office at 312-827-5682 or visit us at www.lyricopera.org/wineauction2018.
The Breaking New Ground Campaign was launched in January 2013 to implement the company’s blueprint for a world-class, twenty-first century opera company. This Campaign allows Lyric to continue to produce major productions of the highest caliber, update media, marketing, and audience development programs, and fortify Lyric’s endowment. The current focus of the Campaign is to modernize the stage of the Ardis Krainik Theatre with state-of-the-art equipment.

To that end, we have established a new Insull Society comprised of loyal patrons who are contributing $10,000 or more for this critically important stage project. To join the Insull Society, please call 312.827.5675.

Lyric Opera is grateful to the following donors who have made contributions of $5,000 and above to the Campaign as of July 1, 2017.

A career in opera can be a very complex one. So many twists and turns to navigate along the way before one can even launch a career. I’ve been blessed to have enjoyed some success in the eleven years I’ve been singing as a working artist since leaving the Ryan Opera Center in the spring of 2006. And I believe it was the three years in the Ryan Opera Center that helped me take that huge next step from young singer to full-fledged artist. The tools I count on, working in houses such as Frankfurt and San Francisco, I cultivated in Chicago. I believe so much in the work of the Center and all the ways it prepares young singers for the career they are pursuing. And I cannot forget all the wonderful donors through whose generosity the Ryan Opera Center is able to continue its support of young singers every season. You are a part of what I’ve become. Don’t forget that.
