

A dramatic sunset over the ocean with silhouettes of pearl fishers on stilts. The sky is a mix of deep blue, purple, and orange, with a bright sun low on the horizon. The water is dark with some reflections. The fishers are silhouetted against the bright sky, and their stilts are visible in the water.

Lyric

From the General Director

Quite a few operas have in common the fact that audiences' enthusiasm for them has risen markedly in recent decades, thanks to the popularity of one particular portion of the score that has captured the public's imagination. As a result of that renewed interest, the work becomes a great favorite internationally. In that category is The Pearl Fishers, composed by Georges Bizet a dozen years before he gave the world Carmen.

Whether in movies or television commercials, the number known worldwide simply as "the Pearl Fishers duet" has captivated listeners all over the world. Certainly when it comes to stirring, uplifting expressions of friendship, there are few moments in opera to surpass it. The excitement for opera lovers happens when their enthusiasm for the duet leads them to the opera that includes it. They then discover that The Pearl Fishers is a great deal more than that duet – the entire score is irresistible. It boasts breathtaking arias for tenor, soprano, and baritone, stupendous choral scenes, and brilliance from the orchestra that brings this Frenchman's view of ancient Ceylon excitingly to life.

This opera has only a four-person cast, and each singer needs stellar vocalism and stage presence. I'm thrilled to welcome back four artists who are great friends of this company. Marina Rebeka (Leïla) has already exhibited her extraordinary vocal dexterity and theatrical flair in her Lyric portrayals of two signature roles, Violetta in La traviata and Donna Anna in Don Giovanni. With The Pearl Fishers, Ryan Opera Center alumnus Matthew Polenzani (Nadir) – whose Duke of Mantua you enjoyed earlier this season in Lyric's Rigoletto – is returning to the French repertoire, to which he has brought unique elegance in Lyric portrayals of Massenet's Werther, Gounod's Roméo, and Offenbach's Hoffmann. Mariusz Kwiecien (Zurga), vividly remembered as our remarkable Don Giovanni and Onegin, triumphed alongside Matthew in the recent new Met production of The Pearl Fishers. Like Mariusz and Marina, Andrea Silvestrelli (Nourabad) is singing his first French role with us, after successes in Mozart, Bellini, Verdi, Wagner, and Puccini.

During Sir Andrew Davis's remarkable tenure as Lyric's music director, it's been one of our greatest joys to witness his conducting of French repertoire. From Les Troyens, Carmen, and Manon to Les Troyens, Faust, Werther, Don Quichotte, and Dialogues of the Carmelites, Andrew has revealed the glory of this repertoire. I'm delighted that he will now be able to add The Pearl Fishers, to which we can expect him to bring the thorough stylistic command that has made his French-opera performances here – as well as in other major houses worldwide – so memorable.

The Pearl Fishers production we're presenting this season has enchanted audiences throughout the United States. Originating in 2004 at San Diego Opera, it marks the first time fashion icon Zandra Rhodes designed both sets and costumes for an opera production. For more than four decades, Zandra has enlivened the international fashion scene with her breathtaking gift for color and her truly astounding imagination. I'm very pleased that Lyric audiences will at last be able to experience her designs for Bizet's opera.

I know you'll relish the spectacular sights and sounds of The Pearl Fishers!

STEVE LEONARD

Lyric

From the Chairman

On behalf of the Board of Directors, I'm delighted to welcome you to Lyric Opera of Chicago.

This season is a particularly varied and distinctive one, launched by Gluck's exquisite Orphée et Eurydice in John Neumeier's historic new production, Verdi's powerfully dramatic Rigoletto, and the second installment in Lyric's monumental new production of Wagner's Ring cycle with Die Walküre. Following The Pearl Fishers, our audiences can look forward to two masterpieces of Italian opera, Puccini's spectacular Turandot and Bellini's captivating I Puritani; a gem of the Mozart repertoire, Così fan tutte; and a return to French repertoire with Gounod's romantic Faust.

Speaking personally, one of the most rewarding aspects of Lyric – not only as chairman, but as a longtime subscriber and patron – is my joy in introducing family, friends, and business colleagues to the company and the art form. I hope you'll consider doing the same! When I receive out-of-town visitors during the opera season, I always try to include an evening at Lyric. It's inevitably a major highlight of their stay.

A Lyric performance isn't only an opportunity to dress up and go out with your significant other or with close friends for an elegant evening – it's also an unforgettable and rewarding experience of timeless stories set to some of the world's greatest music and performed by many of the top artists of our day.

Lyric's mainstage productions are, of course, the core of every season we present. I also encourage you to explore the unique activities of Lyric Unlimited, our initiative focused on community engagement and education. It is one of the ways that the company stays relevant as a cultural service provider to all of Chicago, whether with newly commissioned works, community-created performances or the special programs presented in dozens of public schools all over Chicago every year. The level of creativity at work in Lyric Unlimited presentations has been truly inspiring, and it has exposed the art form of opera to tens of thousands of students across Chicagoland.

By presenting opera in new and non-traditional ways, Lyric Unlimited helps to grow and expand our audiences. I invite you to join me at one of the Lyric Unlimited performances of Fellow Travelers in March or Family Day at Lyric on April 7.

At Lyric, we truly cherish our donors and patrons. We consider each one of you as members of the Lyric family. It can sometimes be trite to declare, "Every gift counts," but at Lyric it's true: you're going above and beyond what you're paying for the ticket price. You're investing in Lyric, entrusting that we will turn your gift into great art. We take that responsibility very seriously and are constantly imagining new ways to enhance your personal experience at Lyric, build new audiences for opera, and do it all in the most cost-effective way we can.

Many thanks to all of you who play a vital role in ensuring that our great art form and our great company continue to serve Chicago and the world of opera today and in the years to come.

An Opera-tunity to Remember

Looking behind the scenes at what it takes to be an intern at Lyric

By Kamaria Morris

The first day of work can be intimidating for anyone. You're not quite sure what you'll be doing, or if your new coworkers will like you, or even where to sit and eat for lunch. You're bright-eyed and eager to learn, but filled to the brim with trepidation and anxiety. This feeling – which most of us know quite well – can be even more pronounced when you're an intern, fresh off a semester in college and in an unfamiliar professional work environment for the first time. Will you spend your days running errands? Filling coffee orders? Making endless copies of documents and spreadsheets? Interns can often feel undervalued or underutilized, which is one reason Lyric strives to be different.

While it's difficult to determine officially when Lyric first began its internship program, it's safe to say they've been an important element of the company since at least the early 1980s. The program has grown exponentially since then, as the interest in becoming a coveted intern for one of the most prestigious arts organizations in the country has only increased. Averaging roughly 25 interns per year in a variety of departments, Lyric's internship program strives to offer its participants an enriching learning experience.

"From our perspective, our interns are a valuable part of our teams, pitching in on critical processes and projects across our departments," says Elizabeth Landon, Lyric's vice-president of human resources, "and we value their contributions immensely."

The process of becoming an intern at Lyric begins with candidates applying online. Internship descriptions are posted on a variety of career search websites, including Glassdoor, Indeed, and LinkedIn. Staff members also visit career and internship fairs at colleges and universities to meet with potential interns face to face for preliminary interviews. All applications include a résumé and cover letter, but depending on the specific internship, they may also be asked to provide a writing sample, links to social media pages, portfolios, or demo reels.

The criteria for acceptance into the program can differ by department as well, but there are a few universal criteria all prospective Lyric interns should possess. Lindsey Raker, a former marketing intern who was hired full-time last year as a marketing associate, is now charged with selecting interns for the marketing and public relations department. She explains that Lyric is looking for "someone who has done their research about the company, who has a genuine passion for the arts, and who is eager to learn and be a part of the team." And while a general passion for the arts is important, Landon adds, "we recognize that many aspiring singers and performers gravitate to roles anywhere they can find in the performing arts. While we value enthusiasm for the art form, it's a real interest in doing work for a specific department that attracts us to intern candidates." Once the initial screening and interview process is complete, if the hiring manager for the department determines that a particular candidate is a good fit, an offer is made and a start date is determined.

Interns typically begin their first day on the job by meeting with their manager and other team members from the department in which they'll be working.

From there, they're given a tour of the office tower, which includes common areas such as the kitchen, bathrooms, and lunch cafeteria/canteen space. A backstage tour might follow, where they view the stage, rehearsal spaces, wig/makeup/costume areas, and dressing rooms.

At some point during that day, the new interns visit the human resources office, where they're given an orientation packet – created by a former HR intern, no less! It includes information about the overall internship program, Lyric's history and mission, intern perks, policies, and general building information. While there, each intern has a photo taken for a company badge that gives them access to different spaces throughout the building. Finally, a member from the information technology department meets with them and helps set up their computer credentials. At long last, the workday can begin!

In the same way no one role or department in a company the size of Lyric is the same, it's also true that no internship is the same. Duties and projects can run the gamut, and they're constantly changing and being refined each season. However, the interns all begin by learning the day-to-day operations of their specific department.

For example:

- Marketing and public relations: Interns' tasks can include assisting with programs and direct-mail pieces, writing press releases and radio commercials, and assisting on special events or video shoots.
- Wig and makeup department: Interns receive hands-on training in styling and application, including the construction of wigs and facial hair, and theatrical makeup skills.
- Audience engagement: Interns assist with patron research and the organization of survey data, and work to implement and improve customer service and retention campaigns.

Internships in ticketing, social media, dramaturgy, Lyric Unlimited, Ryan Opera Center, artistic, human resources, development, graphic design, and information technology are also options, depending on the needs of each department at the time. "As one of Chicago's premier cultural institutions," Landon says, "we owe it to the community to make a variety of experiences available. It's one of the ways we can welcome young people interested in the performing arts and non-profit careers to get their feet wet."

So what does it take for an intern at Lyric to be successful? According to Raker, interns should be prepared to dive right in from the start. "There are so many opportunities to learn at Lyric – helping with events, seeing shows, going on backstage tours, and working with other departments." She continues, "The interns who get the most out of their time here are the ones who take full advantage of these opportunities, are willing and eager to learn, and who get to know their colleagues and really become part of the team." If the timing is right and interns prove to be a good fit, they are sometimes asked to stay on and join Lyric full-time. "I love it when we can hire an intern into an entry-level role," Landon adds. "Many of our current professionals started as interns."

Josie Campbell is one such case. She has been at Lyric for 33 years and is now the artistic services manager, working closely with renowned singers, directors, and creative teams. While Campbell is a familiar presence around the rehearsal and backstage areas, few know she actually began her career at Lyric in 1984 as an intern. While completing a master's program in arts administration, she was encouraged to apply for an internship at Lyric as a way to learn the ins and outs of an arts organization first-hand. "I assisted with a variety of production tasks, and was able to learn how you organize and plan an opera season,” says Campbell. “I fostered relationships with the people who were in charge of the production and artistic departments, which was invaluable to me.”

Dramaturgy intern Richie Hoffman giving the pre-opera talk before a performance of Les Troyens.

Dan Novak, vice president and director of the Ryan Opera Center, preparing for the Women's Board Wine Auction during his internship in the development department, 1989.

As a requirement of her graduate program, Campbell was asked to complete a final project. She chose to create a written history of Lyric, which allowed her to learn even more about the storied institution she called home for a few months. Toward the end of Josie’s internship, a colleague in the rehearsal department accepted a job in New York, so she knew a position would be opening soon. “My timing was great!” she says, “and I decided I would go for that job.” To her delight, she was offered the role as an assistant to the operations department and began her career helping coordinate dance, chorus, and child auditions. She was also assigned to manage travel and accommodations for artists, which remains one of her duties today.

Dan Novak, director of the Ryan Opera Center, similarly began as an intern at Lyric in January 1989. “I was a college student at Northwestern University, and I had time in my course work to do a full-time internship in the development department with the Women’s Board,”

Novak says. After his three-month internship concluded, he returned to school to finish his degree. Shortly before graduation, he received a surprise call notifying him of a new vacancy in the very office where he had interned. He was offered the job, and jumped at the chance to return. “I was thrilled! I’d thoroughly enjoyed my internship at Lyric, and was excited to be back.” That was June of 1989. Novak began as assistant to the Women’s Board office, then moved into the role of assistant ticket manager, followed by a return to the development department as assistant director for Chapter activities. In 2000, he joined the Ryan Opera Center as manager, before being named its director in 2013.

Undoubtedly, Lyric’s internship program will continue to grow and welcome new participants with each passing season. Students receive hands-on work experience within their departments, but perhaps more important, they learn the inner workings of a large-scale cultural institution with all the complexities of opera and the performing arts. “Starting my career as an intern at Lyric was incredible!” says Raker. “Now that I’m on the other side, it’s so rewarding to keep discovering more talented young people, and I hope the program continues for years to come.”

Former interns share their favorite Lyric moments

I was taken aback by the kind of people I’ve been able to meet and rub elbows with. Renée Fleming, Ana María Martínez, Richard E. Grant – all amazing individuals and artists. I’m so glad to have gotten the opportunity to meet them.

— Jay Gummert
(Dramaturgy)

I worked on Lyric Unlimited’s Community Created Performance program, which gave three community groups the opportunity to turn their personal stories into a live theater piece. By the end of the summer, the groups had worked so hard to create their show, going from simple icebreakers to a fully scripted production. I felt very proud of their work, and very grateful for the experience I had working with everyone.

— Sage Pope
(Lyric Unlimited/Chicago Voices)

I got to meet THE Amber Wagner, who is starring in the title role of Turandot this season at Lyric. She was the nicest person – she asked me about what kind of repertoire I was doing, and even congratulated me on my internship. Amber Wagner. Congratulating me. I still can’t believe it.

— Lauren Ingebrigtsen
(Social Media)

Later in my internship, I was given the opportunity to deliver the pre-opera talk for Les Troyens, an unforgettable experience!

— Richie Hoffman
(Dramaturgy)

My most memorable moment was opening night of Das Rheingold and attending the opera ball afterward. It’s not every day you get to be in a dance circle with Eric Owens (and have pictures to prove it).

Great Ways for Young Adults to Engage with Lyric

Students and young professionals looking for ways to support their favorite arts organization, network with other young opera fans, and gain new experiences need look no further! From College Night events to glamorous fundraising galas and board leadership opportunities, there are many ways for young adults to engage with Lyric.

Through the NEXT program, full-time college students can unlock $20 tickets for performances throughout the season. These aren't the nosebleeds seats, either – students are placed in the best available seats at the time of purchase (often up to $200)!

Students sign up online to receive email notifications when NEXt tickets become available. They may also choose a NEXt Now package with three or more performances, at the same $20 ticket price, and exclusive access to NEXt events. An example is the Rigoletto College Night in November, where students met in the Opera Club before the performance for snacks and a Q&A session with a member of Lyric's creative team.

Students who identify as leaders, social influencers, and Lyric fans can also apply to the Lyric University Ambassadors program. This is a great opportunity for anyone who loves promoting events, creating buzz, networking, and working for a cause they believe in. The University Ambassadors elevate awareness of Lyric's NEXt program among their classmates while sharing their excitement about the Lyric season on their favorite social-media platforms. They gain real-world event marketing experience, at the same time making an impact on their campuses, networking with and learning from Lyric staff, and getting free admission to certain Lyric productions and events.

Once students finish college and begin their working lives, they can take advantage of another opportunity at Lyric. A project of the company's Renée Fleming Initiative and named one of the best such groups in Chicago by Make It Better, Lyric Young Professionals (LYP) isn't just all parties and costumes. LYP is a growing group of opera lovers, ages 21 to 45, dedicated to building the next generation of Lyric supporters.

LYP members pay annual dues from $150 to $400. They gain access to exclusive $35 ticket packages through the LYP Medley program. Other exclusive LYP benefits also include invitations to dress rehearsals and backstage tours; events like the annual Halloween Masquerade Gala at the Lyric Opera House – the most fun you can have while supporting the arts; "Cocktails and Conversations," where members can engage with Lyric stars; intermission and post-performance meet-ups in the foyer; and other networking opportunities throughout the season.

There are so many ways younger audiences can engage with Lyric – and the best part is that we're ensuring an enthusiastic future audience for a wondrous art form!

ACT ONE

Fishermen gather and dance on the beach. Zurga interrupts the revels to remind everyone that the time has come for them to choose a king. The group chooses Zurga himself, and all declare their allegiance to him. Everyone is astonished at the arrival of Nadir, Zurga's dear friend, who has returned unexpectedly after years of adventures. There is tension in the air. When he and Zurga are alone, the two recall their last trip together: They had reached the gates of Candi when they saw a beautiful woman at the temple of Brahma. Both of them fell in love with her at first sight, but they swore to forget her for the sake of their friendship. Now they swear again to remain friends.

Nourabad, the high priest of Brahma, and his fellow priests bring a veiled young woman before Zurga. She is about to follow the old custom: Once a year, a veiled virgin is chosen to pray for the protection of the pearl fishers for a day and a night. If she remains faithful to the law and is seen by no one, her reward will be the most beautiful pearl the fishermen can find. If she disobeys, she will die. The young woman is shocked to recognize Nadir, and when he hears her voice, he believes it may well be that of Leila, whom he and Zurga had promised each other to forget. Zurga notices Leila's sudden apprehension, but she recovers her composure. Everyone leaves for the temple except Nadir, who reflects on his beautiful memory of Leila. He recalls that, even after he and Zurga had made their vow, he saw Leila again and was captivated.

Leila lifts her voice in a prayer to Brahma, mesmerizing Nadir as he watches her from below. As she sings, Nadir realizes that it is Leila and calls to her. Equally rapturous upon recognizing him, she continues to sing, but now her soaring melody is meant for Nadir alone.

ACT TWO

Nourabad informs Leila that the priests will be keeping watch, which will allow her to sleep peacefully. Leila recalls the vow she made years before. She tells the priest that, when she was a child, a fugitive once came to her family's hut begging for help. She hid him there, and in so doing saved his life. His enemies appeared, threatening to kill her, but she said nothing. When night fell, the man fled, but not before giving her his necklace. Nourabad reiterates that riches, glory, and happiness will all be hers if she keeps her vow.

Alone with her thoughts, Leila seems to sense Nadir's presence. As in the past, she can feel him watching over her. She is ecstatic to hear him serenading her in the distance. When Nadir appears, Leila becomes apprehensive, but Nadir, who confesses that he could not keep away from her, ardently declares his love. A storm approaches. They do not notice Nourabad watching them. Upon seeing the two together, the high priest rushes away in a rage.

The lovers promise to see each other the next day. A shot is heard. Nourabad, the other priests, and the pearl fishers appear at the temple. Nadir escapes, only to be captured again. The crowd is about to strike him when Zurga rushes in and orders them to stop, since it is he alone who will decide the pair's fate. He whispers to the two that they should flee immediately. The furious Nourabad tears off Leila's veil, and Zurga instantly recognizes her. Now his concern turns to fury, and he proclaims that only misfortune will await both Leila and Nadir. When the storm breaks out violently, the pearl fishers kneel and pray to Brahma for protection.

ACT THREE

Scene 1. Alone in his tent, Zurga is unable to sleep, knowing that his former friend and the woman they both love must die at sunrise. He longs for them to forgive the rage that has overwhelmed him. When Leila is brought in, she asserts her willingness to die if Zurga will spare Nadir's life. Zurga refuses, and, in her anger and frustration, Leila curses him, declaring that she will love Nadir forever. Nourabad announces that the executions must soon take place. Leila is ready, but before she is taken away, she gives a fisherman her necklace and asks that it be taken to her mother when she is dead.

Scene 2. The pearl fishers dance wildly as they prepare for the deaths of Nadir and Leila. The two are about to be executed when a sinister glow appears in the distance. Zurga rushes in, crying out that the encampment has been set on fire. All rush off to save their belongings, leaving Zurga, Leila, and Nadir alone. Zurga – the fugitive whose life Leila once saved – reveals that he lit the fire himself in order to save their lives. The lovers express their joy, but Zurga knows his own fate is sealed. Nadir hurries away with Leila, leaving Zurga alone to face certain death.

The Evanston native, a Ryan Opera Center alumnus and one of today's most admired tenors internationally, is particularly renowned for bel canto and French opera. He scored one of his greatest career successes in 2016 starring in the Metropolitan Opera's first production in a century of The Pearl Fishers. This season Polenzani will return to Munich's Bavarian State Opera (La favorite), the Met (L'elisir d'amore), and the Zurich Opera House (Luisa Miller). In addition to The Pearl Fishers, he has triumphed onstage in recent seasons at the Met in company premieres of Roberto Devereux and Maria Stuarda (both in new productions seen in HD), as well as in Vienna and Munich as Werther. Polenzani recently made his eagerly awaited role debut as Rodolfo/La bohème in Barcelona. Highlights of his concert appearances include Messiah (New York Philharmonic) and Mahler's Des Knaben Wunderhorn (Carnegie Hall). Among Polenzani's recordings are Brahms's Liebeslieder Walzer and three solo discs: live recitals from the Verbier Festival and London's Wigmore Hall, and a studio recording of Liszt songs with his regular recital partner, pianist Julius Drake. The tenor is a past recipient of two of America's most prestigious awards for singers, the Richard Tucker Award (2004) and the Metropolitan Opera's Beverly Sills Artist Award (2008). *Matthew Polenzani is generously sponsored by Patricia A. LYRIC OPERA OF CHICAGO

Les pêcheurs de perles – Bizet’s Enchanting Late Bloomer

By Mark Thomas Ketterson

METROPOLITAN OPERA ARCHIVES

There is a delightful photograph in the archives of the Metropolitan Opera revealing tenor Enrico Caruso, soprano Frieda Hempel, and baritone Giuseppe De Luca costumed for the 1916 Met premiere of Georges Bizet’s Les pêcheurs de perles (The Pearl Fishers). It’s a quaintly old-fashioned shot. A modestly veiled Hempel looks every inch a sturdy little hausfrau, while the men are decorously swathed in sumptuous fabrics that virtually cover them from head to toe. The opera ran three performances and, according to the Evening Sun, “brought the house down.” Then it vanished from the Met for a full century.

That was a typical course for Pêcheurs, a work that has consistently delighted audiences, confounded critics, and only hovered on the fringes of the repertory – until the twenty-first century, when it became a bona-fide hit.

In 1863, the 24-year-old Bizet was an unproven commodity. His defining masterpiece, Carmen, was 12 years in the future. Bizet had demonstrated unusual promise, however, and at the tender age of 18, while still a student at the Conservatoire de Paris, his one-act opera Le docteur Miracle had won an important competition. The following year, the young composer was awarded the esteemed Prix de Rome and spent three years honing his craft in Italy.

The prestige earned by the Prix de Rome was ultimately to provide Bizet an entrée into the Parisian operatic scene. Léon Carvalho, the impresario of the Théâtre-Lyrique, had been conferred a sizable endowment by Count Alexandre Colonna-Walewski. Count Walewski’s only stipulation was that Carvalho was to stage a new work by a Prix de Rome winner each season. Carvalho offered Bizet a libretto; a tale of a love triangle in colorful Ceylon entitled Les pêcheurs de perles.

The libretto had been hastily cobbled together by the team of Eugène Cormon and Michel Carré, neither of whom was particularly enthusiastic about the assignment. For inspiration, the pair turned to a recently published novel by Octave Sachot, L’île de Ceylan et ses curiosités naturelles, and also lifted several elements from Spontini’s 1807 opera La Vestale. The result was an admittedly contrived bit of sentimental exotica, but was deemed serviceable enough for the task, especially when the composer seemed to them little more than a boy.

Les pêcheurs de perles premiered at the Théâtre-Lyrique on September 30, 1863. Audiences took to Bizet’s music immediately, and the opera was enthusiastically applauded. Critical consensus was far less kind. Bizet was accused of having fallen under the influence of the “new Italian style” during his sojourn in Italy. Worse, he was accused of “Wagnerism” – a popular epithet hurled at young composers at the time, and a questionable one. Beyond the French version of Tannhäuser that played at the Opéra in 1861 and a handful of instrumental concerts, Paris had been given precious little opportunity to experience Wagner’s music.

One of the few complimentary voices was a markedly interesting one; Hector Berlioz, who was notorious for decrying the “mediocrities” foisted upon the French public by fledgling composers, found the work “full of fire” and wrote, “The score does M. Bizet the greatest honor.” Otherwise, the critical reception can be summed up in the words of Benjamin Jouvin of Le Figaro, who in one of the most famous snarky reviews in opera history opined, “There were neither fisherman in the libretto, nor pearls in the music.”

Although the failure of Pêcheurs is recounted in many a reference book, the reasons behind it remain a trifle murky, particularly given the enormous popularity the work has gained in the current century. The fault is generally laid at the feet of the libretto, and indeed it is dramatically thin stuff. In later years, Eugène Cormon admitted that had he realized what a melodic genius he was writing for, he would have made better work of it. That doesn’t really answer the question, however – many beloved works have prevailed in spite of weak dramaturgy.

Much of the problem probably lay in the fact that French theatrical music was approaching a conceptual crossroad at that time. French opera had primarily existed in two forms, grand opéra and opéra comique, both of which were becoming mired in their own conventions. There was great devotion to tradition, but also a gnawing awareness that French opera was seriously in need of a reboot. The rigid structural formulas of grand opéra were beginning to lose their appeal, which would continue to wane in ensuing decades. Pêcheurs fielded the easy accessibility of opéra comique, but it was through-composed, without the spoken dialogue that was a defining feature of the genre. Moreover, Bizet’s orchestrations had a new density and lushness – a far cry from the delicate confections of Boieldieu or Auber, two masters of the comique form. Les pêcheurs de perles was an opéra lyrique, a newly emerging hybrid to be further developed by Ambroise Thomas and Jules Massenet.

Moreover, some among the press had decried what was seen as a novice composer’s presumption before hearing a note of the music. “For the nearly four months since this work was announced, it has been spoken of as an event,” complained L’Europe artiste,

The pearl fishermen of Ceylon, depicted in 1887 for the British weekly illustrated newspaper The Graphic (top) and today (bottom).

“its beauties are extolled; these are discussed neither more nor less than if this had been the work of a proven master.” Bizet was also rebuked for taking a bow at the premiere. “This may be the custom in Italy,” sneered Gustave Bertrand, “but we are in France, and M. Bizet is French. We here do not permit such exhibitions except for an absolutely exceptional success.” Even his appearance was raked over the coals, as no fewer than five newspapers reported that he tastelessly sported a grey paletot (topcoat) over his black suit. One senses a critical community whose slavish adherence to tradition felt threatened by a young upstart who was bucking the system.

Pêcheurs ran for 18 performances and was never mounted again in Bizet’s short lifetime. The composer carefully adopted a withering public stance on his youthful creation, calling it a work of no value. When caught off guard, however, he could wistfully acknowledge being “pleased to have been able to write a few of its passages at so young an age.”

The opera was finally revived at La Scala in 1886. It progressed through many of the world’s musical centers in the next few years, no doubt aided by the recent popularity of Carmen (1875). Sadly, the autograph score had been lost, which led to considerable tampering. Milan employed the services of a second-rank French composer, Benjamin Godard, to write a grand trio to conclude the piece (an obvious appropriation from Gounod’s Faust). Various journeymen created alternate endings, including one in which Leïla commits suicide! Fortunately, restorative work began in the 1970s; musicologist Arthur Hammond worked from Bizet’s piano score, and later, conductor Brad Cohen fortuitously secured the original conductor’s score from 1863. Pêcheurs achieved a reasonable European presence throughout the twentieth century at the Comique, and in Vienna and Berlin. American mountings were exceedingly rare, though Lyric presented the opera in 1966 and 1998, and New York City Opera gave it a go.

After 2001, a fascinating trend emerged. Pêcheurs began popping up on season brochures with a frequency that would have astonished Bizet himself, and has probably clocked in more North American performances in the last twenty years than in the entire preceding century. Lyric revived it 2008, and in 2015 even the Met joined the party with a new production. What, one might query, accounts for the opera’s extraordinary reversal of fortune?

Some credit is due to the delectable production by iconic fashion and textile designer Zandra Rhodes, which Lyric is presenting this season. First mounted in San Diego in 2004, Rhodes’s kaleidoscopic, exotic imagery based upon Sri Lankan art and architecture has delighted audiences at many companies, and was dubbed the “essential production” of the piece by Opera News.

But then, opera production has evolved to meet contemporary tastes. There is no question that visual concerns have come to rival musical matters in importance, and singers are expected to look their roles. One wonders what Caruso, Hempel, and De Luca would have thought about the parade of shirtless Zurgas and provocatively clad Leïlas that have graced contemporary stages. In a society obsessed with fitness and physical beauty, Pêcheurs seems an ideal vehicle; that the work’s popular ascension has coincided with the “barihunk” phenomenon is no mere coincidence.

There is a cyclical nature to musical interest. In the early twentieth century, Baroque opera and the bulk of bel canto was largely swept aside by public preference for the grittier appeal of Puccini and the verismo school. The delicately perfumed French

Zandra Rhodes on Designing The Pearl Fishers

I was asked if I’d ever designed opera by Ian Campbell, who was running San Diego Opera at the time. I did The Magic Flute there, and after that he said, “There’s this very small opera that Bizet put together that never got anywhere in his lifetime. It was supposed to be set in Mexico and then they changed their minds. The sky’s the limit – just be very Zandra Rhodes about it! It doesn’t have to be very real.” So it’s got magical turquoise and orange and pink palm trees. I’d been to India a lot, so it’s also got Zandra Rhodes Indian saris.

I was actually very lucky: just before I started designing the production, I was invited to go to India to judge the Miss India contest with an audience of something like 50 million. I asked, “Is there a fee?” “There isn’t a fee,” they said, “but we’ll fly you business class to Hyderabad.” I said that in that case, I wanted to go on to Ceylon – that is, Sri Lanka – to see whether it was enough like India. I took a side trip there with my sketching partner, and I had my sketch book with me. I got the patterns of the wonderful ladies swimming for pearls at an ancient monument. I just wanted to see if I could be slightly authentic initially before ‘Zandrafying’ everything! We found saris with the wonderful borders and pallus (that’s the bit that hangs in the back). Once we were back in London and brought them to my print room, we printed over them with Zandra Rhodes seashells and Zandra Rhodes wiggles.

The production’s color palette includes all the religious people in vibrant, “singing” orange with shocking pink. All the villagers representing the sea are in pale blues and turquoises and seashells, but with flowing saris – it’s an ethereal, magical world. The leading lady is in a beautiful pink and yellow sari with a magical floral headdress, and we hand-painted the veil she wears in her entrance scene.

When I began designing The Pearl Fishers, I was so thrilled and got so into the music. I never even imagined the production would eventually travel all over America! It’s been quite wonderful seeing it in different performances. I feel so fortunate to be able to watch it from the wings, seeing the singers giving their own interpretations, and hearing how magical the voices are. In opera you’ve got all your senses being attacked, with the voices, the music, combining with the visual element – it’s far deeper than one even realizes.

repertory barely stood a chance. But just as those repertoires have subsequently re-emerged, French opera has begun to win back listeners. After decades of compositional dissonance, and innovations of the minimalist school, audiences have understandably become eager to be caressed with melody again. Who better to turn to than Bizet, that master tunesmith who gave us Carmen?

It's difficult to imagine a score more luxuriously melodic than Pêcheurs. The tenor/baritone duet "Au fond du temple saint" remains one of the most beautiful blendings of male voices ever composed (Bizet thought so, too – the piece was even sung at his funeral). The repeats of the duet's initial theme that conclude it and later appear in the opera's final moments were not in Bizet's original score – that is a matter of tradition – but in any form, it has long been a concert favorite. Interest in the opera has been fanned by the duet's entry into pop culture, significantly after its use in Peter Weir's film Gallipoli to underscore the devotion between two ill-fated soldiers. The often overlooked Leïla/Zurga duet in Act Three is also a marvelous interlude of music drama when interpreters approach it seriously. Then we have the ineffable lyricism of Nadir's "Je crois entendre encore," the shimmering coloratura flourishes of Leïla's "Comme autrefois," and Zurga's remorseful "O Nadir, tendre ami" – not to mention splendid choral opportunities.

Debates over Les pêcheurs de perles are endless. Some operagoers regard the piece as a guilty pleasure, and there are those who disregard it entirely (though one suspects even they hum along when nobody's looking). But for those of us who value romance, and yearn to be spirited away on an escapist journey of glorious melody, Bizet's late bloomer is just the ticket.

Modern Match – The Pearl Fishers

"Bromance" is an idea that's swept the nation, referring to two males' close, non-romantic friendship. From Chandler and Joey in Friends to Sesame Street's Bert and Ernie, audiences adore watching bromances blossom. But when love and jealousy get in the way, will these bromances survive? That question arises in The Pearl Fishers, as Nadir and Zurga must work through their love for the same woman in order to save their own friendship.

Zurga and Nadir are long-lost friends, both from the city of Candi. It was there that they both fell in love with a young priestess, Leïla, causing strife between them. They swore to choose friendship over love, and when reunited in Ceylon after years apart, they once again make this pledge. However, love and jealousy prove to be powerful counters to their bromance.

Leïla is the foil to their friendship, not unlike Andy in Pixar's Toy Story series. While Leïla is a beautiful woman who has two friends fall in love with her, Andy is a child whose toys adore him and want to be his favorite. Woody, the cowboy, and Buzz, the space ranger, are thought of as the ideal best friends, but it wasn't always like that. Think back to the original Toy Story, where Woody became so jealous of Andy favoring Buzz, his new toy, that Woody pushed Buzz out a window! That's not unlike Zurga's rage at discovering Nadir and Leïla's hidden love and sentencing the two to death. Jealousy is a commanding emotion that can seemingly break the strongest of friendships.

As Leïla and Nadir prepare for death, so, too, does Buzz begin to accept that he's "just a toy." Realizing that jealousy has made a monster out of them, both Zurga and Woody have a change of heart. Zurga sets fire to the village as a plot to distract the fishermen and allow his friend to escape. Woody restores Buzz's confidence and comes up with a plan to return them both to Andy's loving arms. In the end, jealousy is overruled by the deep connection and love that the two feel for each other. Zurga and Nadir's friendship may have some bumps along the way – as do Woody and Buzz's – but nothing can stop their bromance.

— Margaret Rogers

The author, Lyric's dramaturgy intern earlier in the year, is in her senior year at the University of Minnesota.

Director's Note – The Pearl Fishers

KEN HOWARD/SAN DIEGO OPERA

Zandra Rhodes's design for the opening of Act Two of The Pearl Fishers.

When Ian Campbell, then San Diego Opera's general and artistic director, asked me to direct a new production of The Pearl Fishers in 2004 with designs by Zandra Rhodes, little did I think that the production would have such an interesting life.

I approached the opera with some trepidation, as its pitfalls are well known. For example, there is little dramatic interest in a one-dimensional "Hail fellow, well met" scene that precedes one of the most famous duets in the operatic repertoire. And not only that – the plot is rather far-fetched. From the beginning, I set out to try to make the characters three-dimensional, so we needed to establish some conflict. Discussions with designer and choreographer prior to rehearsal provided many thoughts as to how this might be brought off, and in rehearsal we developed them further.

It is the day when the village elects a new chief. Nourabad, the High Priest, represents the old order and is concerned that if Zurga is elected, he will be a liberal leader and village life will deteriorate. From the outset, therefore, there is "political" confrontation. And this is complicated by a layer of personal conflict. Zurga has always lived in the shadow of his friend Nadir, who has been absent from the village for some time after the atmosphere between them became intolerable when they both fell in love with a mysterious priestess in Candi. Without Nadir overshadowing him, Zurga has become popular with the people in his own right. But at the moment of his election, Nadir returns and Zurga's moment of glory is mitigated as the focus shifts to the village's favorite, and Zurga's former friend. While at first there is awkwardness, there is finally some sort of reconciliation.

But reconciliation between the friends is short-lived. A strange twist of fate brings the priestess from the temple at Candi to preside over the pearl-diving that follows Zurga's election. Since she is veiled, Zurga remains ignorant of the fact, but Nadir and Leïla recognize each other and the die is cast. In a paradise of wildly colorful palm trees and painted silk drops created by Zandra Rhodes, a story of sexual and political passion and betrayal is now played out, rushing headlong to an inevitable conclusion.

Dance has always been an important element in the French operatic repertoire. But if we were to emphasize the conflicts in this production, we knew it was essential to avoid dance in a classical and balletic form, which would work against the primitive society in which the opera takes place. John Malashock, artistic director of Malashock Dance in San Diego, had choreographed a production of Aida for me, and his inventive and unusual style, which evoked Egypt for that opera, seemed ideal for this, too. Consequently, choreography is a significant part of this production and, where many interpretations shorten the extended finale to Act Two, John's powerful and aggressive choreography allows the punishment of Leïla and Nadir to be played out in full.

— Andrew Sinclair

The Pearl Fishers After the Curtain Falls

When the performance is over, try discussing it with your companions and any other opera lovers you know! You can continue your pleasure in The Pearl Fishers for hours – even days – by exchanging ideas about it.

Here are some topics we can suggest:

Nicole Cabell (Leïla) and Eric Cutler (Nadir)
in The Pearl Fishers at Lyric, 2008/09 season.

- How did the music and drama of this production catch your interest?
- When Zurga and Nadir are reunited, they speak of how they were once torn apart by fighting over a woman and how in the end, they pledged allegiance to each other and their friendship over the love of the woman. What would you sacrifice for the friendships you have?
- The duet “Au fond du temple saint” from the first act is one of the most famous duets in opera. How does this duet show the friendship between the two fishers?
- Zurga is the leader of the community of fishermen in Ceylon. What communities or friend groups are you a part of that have unofficial leaders? What qualities do these “leaders” possess that make them a good fit for the role?
- Nadir betrays his friend by having been with Leïla without Zurga’s knowledge, both now and in the past. Is the love he has for her worth the friendship? Why – or why not?
- Leïla struggles between her love of Nadir and her devotion to the god Brahma, and she chooses love even in the face of death. How, in the end, does love prove to be the right choice? And why does Zurga sacrifice himself for the lovers?

To continue enjoying The Pearl Fishers, Lyric dramaturg Roger Pines suggests the following performances:

- DVD – Matthew Polenzani, Diana Damrau, Mariusz Kwiecień, Nicolas Testé; Metropolitan Opera Chorus and Orchestra, cond. Gianandrea Noseda, dir. Penny Woolcock (Erato)

BACKSTAGE LIFE: Charlie Reilly

What is your role here at Lyric, and how long have you held the position?

I am the property master, which means I oversee a prop crew of 15 in obtaining or creating all of the props for Lyric's productions. I actually started my career at Lyric in the electrics department, followed by the carpentry department, and transitioned to working with the small props team creating items such as table settings, food, and other hand-held objects. I've been the property master for five years now, and I've been at Lyric for a total of 36 years.

What led you to work at Lyric?

My father worked as a stagehand here (since the 1954 inaugural season) and really seemed to enjoy it. I was going to school for business to become a stockbroker, but decided to do an apprenticeship at Lyric over the summer while I had a break from school. I never knew I would end up falling in love with it. Once the apprenticeship was over, they offered me a job, and I've been here ever since. My father was here for Lyric's first 16 seasons, and my wife Maureen is Lyric's costume director, so there's been a Reilly here for every curtain!

What's a typical day like for you?

I come in between 6 and 7 a.m. most mornings. My prop crew usually has a show onstage from the night before that we need to take down, and then we might have to set up the stage for a rehearsal. Separate from the main stage, we also have three rehearsal rooms at Lyric that may need to be set up with props.

What's the most challenging aspect of your job?

Time. Our rehearsal periods are so short, and especially in the case of new shows, a production might have six pages of props that are needed. These are items that either have to be bought, upholstered, painted, or even built from scratch completely. The time constraints are really tough, but somehow we make it work!

What keeps you committed to the work you do?

The quality of work and the amazing collaboration that takes place within my team. It's really great when I can go to the opening of a new opera and see the props my staff has created. Seeing something that began as an idea transformed into reality is very rewarding.

What's something about your job that people might not know?

The long hours. My crew arrives early in the morning and can be here until 11 p.m. some nights. There can be periods of 30-40 days of straight work without a day off and that requires dedication like you wouldn't believe. We spend more time here than at our homes, so we've created our own family of sorts. I respect them so much for that. It's a commitment, and it says something about who they are. It's more than a paycheck for them; it's a way of life.

Favorite Lyric moment?

Meeting my wife Maureen here. I certainly wouldn't be who I am if I hadn't met her. I was doing a cue for a show and she was doing a wardrobe change for one of the cast members. We would always talk backstage, but when I asked her to go on a date with me, she said no. Finally, she begrudgingly agreed, and three years later we were married. It's been 23 years!

Beyond opera, what are your other passions?

In my spare time, my wife and I volunteer for an organization called Park Lawn. It was created for the developmentally disabled, and it's really our passion. We help organize fundraising events every year, including motorcycle runs, 5K marathons, and golf outings, which help fund homes specially made for the developmentally disabled. It provides them with a full care center and 24/7 medical treatment. It's truly a fantastic cause.

Scott and Nancy Santi: A Night on the Town at Lyric

Scott and Nancy Santi have music in their blood. The son of the box office manager at Ravinia Festival, Scott grew up attending concerts at the iconic Highland Park venue, as well as listening to classical music and opera records around the house. A native of Cincinnati, Nancy had access to all the wonderful culture that the city had to offer, including the University of Cincinnati College-Conservatory of Music, where her grandmother studied music and served as president of Mu Phi Epsilon, a music fraternity founded there in 1903.

“Classical music was my grandmother’s first love,” Nancy recalls. “Every time I’m at the opera, I think of her and how proud she would be that I have the immense pleasure of being involved at Lyric.” Nancy’s exposure certainly didn’t stop at classical music. “Music was always playing in my house on my parents’ old LP stereo. They would play everything from Sinatra to Schubert, but I especially remember dancing around the house to their record of Carmen. They had just taken me to see a performance of it at the Summer Opera Pavilion at the Cincinnati Zoo, and I was obsessed.”

Although they were both raised in the Midwest, Nancy and Scott met as young adults in Texas, where Scott was starting his career with Illinois Tool Works and Nancy was visiting a friend the summer after graduating from college. “I was having so much fun being in a new place that I decided to stay for a year as a teacher before moving back to Cincinnati. I thought it would be fun to meet a Southern boy,” she jokes, “but instead I met a screw salesman from Chicago!”

After they were married, Scott’s career at ITW brought him back to the Midwest, and eventually to Cincinnati to lead a recently-acquired company. “The timing couldn’t have been more perfect. Two of our children were born while we were there, and my family was close by to help out when needed.” Scott was later called back to ITW’s headquarters in Chicago, and the young family finally settled on the north shore.

Raising their kids and climbing the corporate ladder kept Nancy and Scott plenty busy, but they occasionally made time for a night out on the town. They started coming regularly to Lyric about five years ago when their children were old enough to attend with them. “It’s become really important for us to bring our kids,” Nancy says. “As young adults, Scott and I were enamored with the idea of going to the opera as the perfect night out. Our kids have grown to see it the same way. They love knowing they will have a magical evening whenever they come to the Lyric Opera House, and our involvement here has allowed them to experience so many wonderful events and performances.”

Nancy was asked to join Lyric’s illustrious Women’s Board in 2015, and Scott was shortly thereafter nominated to the Board of Directors, where he now serves on the Executive Committee. Last February, the couple co-chaired the wildly successful and utterly unique Chicago Voices Gala, a multi-genre concert and fundraiser which raised net proceeds of $2 million for Lyric Unlimited.

“Chicago Voices was incredible, and Lyric is really on the cutting edge by presenting programs like that. The evening brought people with different backgrounds and different tastes in music under one roof to celebrate the power of the human voice, which is a language we all speak. It was thrilling to see fans of rapper Lupe Fiasco be blown away by Renée Fleming’s powerful soprano, or Kurt Elling’s jazz loyalists appreciate the Handsome Family’s storytelling through folk music. Opera can have a reputation of being intimidating, so by showcasing varied musical styles on the Lyric Opera stage, Lyric demonstrated its diversity while showing people that opera is accessible, too.”

As a former teacher, Nancy is particularly passionate about exposing the next generation to classical music and opera. “Opera is an amazing tool to reinforce what is being taught in the classroom. There are so many elements to it, so it allows them to utilize skills such as reading, writing, and creative storytelling, and to discuss and think about different topics and themes. When I was teaching in Glenview, my classroom was fortunate enough to participate in Lyric’s Opera Residencies program. We spent several sessions learning the story of Madama Butterfly with assistance from Lyric’s teaching artists. The residency culminated in a performance of the opera by Lyric artists for the whole school. The kids were so invested in the story and the music, and my hope is that it planted a seed which may one day develop into a love of the art form.”

Scott and Nancy are thrilled that their children, nieces, and nephews all appreciate the opportunity to experience world-class performances at Lyric, and they are especially delighted that their youngest son has demonstrated a passion for opera. “Each element of the production appeals to a different audience, and together they create a multi-sensory experience that this generation thrives on. I think the key to attracting new audiences is to create a night out that they will never forget. I feel that Lyric succeeds in providing this each time I step into the magnificent Art Deco theater, and we are so proud to be associated with the cultural crown jewel that is Lyric Opera of Chicago.” Lyric, in turn, is immensely grateful to Scott and Nancy, along with their family, for choosing to spend many nights on the town at Lyric.

MATTHEW POLENZANI

(Duke/Rigoletto; Nadir/The Pearl Fishers)

I am so grateful to Lyric Opera of Chicago for giving me the chance to learn and grow in an amazing environment where beautiful art, made at the highest level, is a daily experience. I was blessed to have made my debut under the baton of Maestro Bruno Bartoletti, with Kiri Te Kanawa, Michael Sylvester, Robert Lloyd, and Alexandru Agache in Simon Boccanegra. I will never forget walking down to the front center of the stage and delivering my line after a trumpet fanfare. It was heady and exciting stuff for a 27-year-old who'd not grown up listening to opera, but had come to love it with a deep and abiding passion.

The voice lessons the Center provided, the classes in language and stage deportment, the opportunity to share the stage with great singers like Sam Ramey, Kurt Moll, Catherine Malfitano, and Ben Heppner among so many others — these experiences are priceless! Without the training, planning, and work done in my years in the Ryan Opera Center, and the help and leadership of the staff helping me grow, I would not be where I am today. I am now about to celebrate my 20th consecutive season with the Metropolitan Opera, where I have given more than 350 performances.

I want to give a big thank you to the donors who continue to support the Ryan Opera Center, allowing it to remain one of the best training programs for singers in the world. Your love and care for this beautiful art form helps ensure its survival, and your support means the world to me and the emerging artists you are helping today.
