Lyric
From the General Director

Giacomo Puccini and Lyric Opera of Chicago go back together to the very beginning of the company, with La bohème and Tosca featured in our first season in 1954. The following season we produced our first Madama Butterfly, in 1956 came La fanciulla del West, and then in 1958 we presented our first production of the most formidable of all the Puccini operas, his mighty Turandot, which we’re delighted to welcome back to the Lyric stage this season.

From those early years to today, Lyric has gone the extra mile to bring authenticity of style and powerful theatricality to the Puccini operas, and Turandot is no exception. This company has always recognized the unique appeal of Puccini’s last opera, with its astoundingly atmospheric and brilliantly colorful orchestration, its massively scaled choral episodes (quite atypical for Puccini, whom we don’t normally associate with choral music), and above all, the opportunities he gave the principal artists.

We come away from Turandot with the sound of Calaf’s “Nessun dorma” still ringing in our ears – it’s no surprise that this has become the world’s favorite tenor aria, used in any number of movies, commercials, and televised voice competitions – but it’s doubly exciting to hear it fulfilling its proper dramatic function within the opera itself. In contrast, the exquisitely delicate arias of the slave Liù invariably reduce listeners to tears with their sweetness and sheer heart. Puccini composed some of his liveliest music for the three ministers, Ping, Pang, and Pong. And, of course, we have the awe-inspiring title character – the “ice princess” Turandot, whose big scene in Act Two contains genuinely hair-raising music that leaves any audience breathless with excitement.

It’s been very gratifying for all of us at Lyric to follow the career of Ryan Opera Center alumna Amber Wagner, culminating in her star-making performance as Senta in The Flying Dutchman at the Metropolitan Opera last season. Having already captivated Lyric audiences in four leading roles, she has returned to us this season to star as Turandot. Opposite her is Stefano La Colla, one of the most promising in the new generation of Italian tenors and now making his Lyric debut as Calaf. Along with the return to our stage of Andrea Silvestrelli as Timur, you can look forward to the debuts of the two sopranos who share the role of Liù, Maria Agresta and Janai Brugger, who have been hailed as dazzling new stars at many major houses internationally.

I’m thrilled that our remarkable music director, Sir Andrew Davis, is returning to Turandot, an opera that brought him great success when he conducted it here during the 2006/07 season. On the podium to lead the final performance of the run will be Robert Tweten, who has led a wide variety of operatic repertoire with major companies throughout North America.

With ancient China giving extraordinary scope for the imagination, Turandot has always been a priceless gift to any talented designer. An example is one of American opera companies’ most distinguished designers, Allen Charles Klein, whose captivating vision of Turandot has been applauded by audiences all over the country. With Rob Kearley’s new staging, the magnificence of Lyric’s chorus and orchestra, and our topflight cast, this is sure to be a Turandot in the grand Lyric tradition.

Lyric
From the Chairman

On behalf of the Board of Directors, I’m delighted to welcome you to Lyric Opera of Chicago.

This season is a particularly varied and distinctive one. We began with Gluck’s Orphée et Eurydice in John Neumeier’s historic new production. Then came a powerfully dramatic revival of Verdi’s Rigoletto, the second installment of Lyric’s monumental new production of Wagner’s Ring cycle with Die Walküre, and Bizet’s ravishing The Pearl Fishers. Following Turandot our audiences can look forward to Bellini’s captivating I Puritani; a gem of the Mozart repertoire, Costa fan tutte; and a return to French repertoire with Gounod’s romantic Faust.

Speaking personally, one of the most rewarding aspects of Lyric – not only as chairman, but as a longtime subscriber and patron – is my joy in introducing family, friends, and business colleagues to the company and the art form. I hope you’ll consider doing the same! When I receive out-of-town visitors during the opera season, I always try to include an evening at Lyric. It’s inevitably a major highlight of their stay.

A Lyric performance isn’t only an opportunity to dress up and go out with your significant other or with close friends for an elegant evening – it’s also an unforgettable and rewarding experience of timeless stories set to some of the world’s greatest music and performed by many of the top artists of our day.

Lyric’s mainstage productions are, of course, the core of every season we present. I also encourage you to explore the unique activities of Lyric Unlimited, our initiative focused on community engagement and education. It is one of the ways that the company stays relevant as a cultural service provider to all of Chicago, whether with newly commissioned works, community-created performances or the special programs presented in dozens of public schools all over Chicago every year. The level of creativity at work in Lyric Unlimited presentations has been truly inspiring, and it has exposed the art form of opera to tens of thousands of students across Chicagoland.

By presenting opera in new and non-traditional ways, Lyric Unlimited helps to grow and expand our audiences. I invite you to join me at one of the Lyric Unlimited performances of Fellow Travelers in March or Family Day at Lyric on April 7.

At Lyric, we truly cherish our donors and patrons. We consider each one of you as members of the Lyric family. It can sometimes be trite to declare, “Every gift counts,” but at Lyric it’s true: you’re going above and beyond what you’re paying for the ticket price. You’re investing in Lyric, entrusting that we will turn your gift into great art. We take that responsibility very seriously and are constantly imagining new ways to enhance your personal experience at Lyric, build new audiences for opera, and do it all in the most cost-effective way we can.

Many thanks to all of you who play a vital role in ensuring that our great art form and our great company continue to serve Chicago and the world of opera today and in the years to come.

Lyric

December 5, 2017 - January 27, 2018
By Magda Krance

Attending a performance at Lyric is a magnificent experience, similar in many ways to dining in an elegant restaurant. You get to enjoy the cumulative efforts of many individuals, seen and behind the scenes, whose particular talents and expertise come together to create a beautifully polished entertainment when the curtain rises or the lid is ceremoniously lifted.

While it might be hard to score an invitation into a top chef’s kitchen to see where the magic is made, at Lyric we now open our kitchen doors, as it were, to public backstage tours a couple of times each month. For just $15, you can explore the inner workings of the Lyric Opera House in a small group of new acquaintances, friends, and/or family, with an expert docent engaging you in a lively Q&A while leading you from one discovery to the next.

On designated dates throughout the year, guides and guests meet in the beautiful Rice Grand Foyer, spend a little time getting to know each other, then set off on their tours. Like Lyric audiences, tour-takers come from all over the region, the country, and the world. Some are area residents curious about a hometown attraction; some are in Chicago on vacation, on business, on job interviews, or as prospective students. Tours on a single morning recently included visitors from Mississippi, Peru, Pasadena, Dallas, Madison, Indianapolis, and South Korea, as well as the Chicago area.

When you take a backstage tour at Lyric, the docents make sure everyone is part of the conversation, rather than simply delivering a walking monologue. Are you an opera aficionado? An architecture buff? Curious about the backstory of a building you may have come to for performances or walked past hundreds of times? A first-time visitor to Chicago? They ask questions and let the answers lead to revelatory gems of information about what you see as you stroll. (Be sure to wear comfortable footwear; casual attire is fine.) The docents are enthusiastic opera lovers who generally have long relationships with Lyric as subscribers, volunteers, and employees. They undergo rigorous training by Lyric Unlimited staff to become fonts of fascinating knowledge about the opera house and Lyric in particular, and opera in general.

Tour guide Mary Houston demonstrating a prop candlestick.
From the starting point in the Art Deco-Art Nouveau splendor of the Daniel F. and Ada L. Rice Grand Foyer, with its stunning Austrian crystal chandeliers, beautifully stenciled ceiling, stately columns, and elegant brass rails and sconces, tours enter the magnificent 3,563-seat Ardis Krainik Theatre. Eyes widen and there are often audible gasps from those who have never crossed the threshold before. Countless clever decorative details can be spotted in both in the auditorium and in the foyer – comedy and tragedy masks, musical instruments, and the like – all underscoring the raison d’être of the space, which is the only opera house that is part of an office building.

Tours proceed to the front row of the theater (curiously, the first row is B), to peek into the orchestra pit and gaze back at the sweep of the full auditorium, all the way up to the top row of the upper balcony, on the sixth floor. From here, the route varies. During the performance season, when work is generally being done onstage, touring visitors walk down temporary stairs into the orchestra pit and explore below the stage before heading into the backstage areas, scenery handling area, etc.

In the off-season, the tour may exit, house left, through the door off Aisle 6 that leads to the stage via Peacock Alley, so named for the gowned, bejeweled, tuxedoed first-night VIPs of yore who would crowd the corridor on their way backstage to congratulate the diva and maestro after the final curtain.

If the stage isn’t in use, tour-takers may briefly be allowed to walk where countless international opera stars have stood and delivered glorious arias and ensembles to packed houses.

It’s a thrilling perspective, and a favorite spot for selfies, of course. The docents will urge an upwards glance to the top of the fly space, an astonishing 12 stories up – the highest in North America – before heading upstage to the huge roll-up doors that lead to the scenery-handling area, formerly the stage of the Civic Theatre. There you’ll see a seemingly jumbled but actually well-organized collage of scenery from up to three opera productions that may be in repertoire or rehearsal during the season. Depending on the show and whether there’s a need for quick changes, makeshift dressing rooms may be set up for chorus members or soloists in this area. Looking up reveals the skeleton of the old theater proscenium, and a gigantic second-floor sliding door, so scenery can be moved on a huge truck lift from stage level to the main rehearsal room.

When the tour is actually backstage, visitors can see the principal artists’ dressing rooms before riding the supersized elevator that can transport a couple-dozen fully costumed chorus members, dancers, or supernumeraries on performance days. (Early on rehearsal and performance days, the jumbo elevator is used to get racks of wigs and costumes to the right dressing rooms.) Behind-the-scenes tour stops include peeks into the fourth-floor chorus dressing rooms and adjacent wig and makeup department, and a clever show-and-tell display case that allows tour-takers to examine and even try on fascinating examples of stagecraft transformation, such as yak hair (used for powdered wigs) and a fake nose. There’s also a stop in the 7th-floor wardrobe department to see up close the incredibly intricate construction of operatic costumes, and a traversal of the 6th-floor catwalk, with its vertigo-inducing view of the stage far below. The rails are chest-high and very sturdy, so you’re at no risk of falling. Photos aren’t allowed here – too risky for those working below.

Tours then descend to the basement by elevator to see the orchestra lounge and instrument lockers, the massive mechanism for lifts and turntable under the stage, the entrance into the orchestra pit, and the tiny cubbyhole where the prompter sits under the stage out of sight of the audience, helping singers with cues and words as needed during performances. On the east side of this lower level there’s a curio cabinet with assorted props including a blood-squirting fake knife, a fake candle that can be blown out, stage food, chalices, and other nifty bits. There’s also an old-timey hand-cranked wind machine that takes a surprising amount of strength to crank.

A few more questions and answers on the way back to street level and the front of the theater, where tour takers emerge, invigorated and enriched, into the daylight. Indianapolis resident Jamie Remien declared the tour experience “wonderful! So informative! You understand what’s going on onstage after going backstage. I’m glad we did this!”

Yenny Hong, a South Korean voice-performance student at the University of Hartford-Connecticut, was visiting Chicago for the first time to celebrate her 21st birthday and see a friend at Roosevelt University. She was positively starry-eyed about the tour: “It was amazing! It’s my dream place, very interesting to explore.” Longtime Lyric patron Nancy Herman vividly recalls her tour experience: “Backstage tours are wonderful! It’s just absolutely eye opening and fascinating. Walking on the catwalk - my gosh! The wigs, all the clothes and shoes, the armory....It’s an entirely different world, it’s enormous, it’s fascinating. It makes you realize this whole busy beehive is back there working together to put it all together. It was great!” Says Christopher McCauley from Pasadena, “This is wonderful! The most extensive tour we’ve ever had.”

Lyric’s tour guides justifiably beam and blush at such accolades. Claudia Winkler has given backstage tours at Lyric since 1995 because “I love opera. I’ve been a subscriber since 1974, so it makes perfect sense to give tours. Interacting with visitors is second nature and a lot of fun! Each year I’ve learned new things during training, and from people I know who work at Lyric, so I keep adding that new information to the tours. It’s so much fun to show visitors what goes into making an opera, and to point out that what they see and hear during our tours also applies to TV, to movies, and to theater productions. I love hearing people say at the end of a tour that they had no idea how many people are involved and how much goes into creating an opera production. They leave with a very good understanding and appreciation of the complexity of the process.”

Kathleen Banks started giving tours at Lyric in 2010. “What made me want to be a tour guide was the fact that I knew I could do it and I cared about doing it. I wanted to become involved with an arts organization, and I thought Lyric would give me the best learning experiences for expanding my knowledge while doing the same for others.” Banks was a music major at the American Conservatory of Music in the Fine Arts Building, earned a master’s in English literature, and taught high school at Kenwood Academy for 30 years. “With my teaching experience, I felt confident that I could conduct interesting tours for students as well as for adults. My experience has been very rewarding and mind-expanding. I hope those who take my tours feel the same way about their experience! I’ve had children ask me how much tickets cost because they wanted to have their parent bring them to a real live opera performance. I’ve also had adults ask me whether the orchestra pit was ever moved or deepened, and I found out it has. Someone even asked where the marble floor of the Rice Grand Foyer was mined!”

Charlene Jacobsen started attending Lyric performances in 1994 and started giving tours at Lyric in 2007. “Since I was a music teacher I have always been interested in opera but never had time to really pursue it, so I thought this would be a wonderful way to learn more about the inside of opera and also to introduce young people and adults to this form of music. Giving tours allows me to continue to teach and lead both students and adults to this most intriguing and unique art form. Giving tours is fun! Meeting various people, revealing to them the inside of opera, helping them to understand this complicated, magical world of music, drama, art, costumes, design, dance and how they combine to be an opera. Opening up the world of opera to others is very exciting!”

Magda Krance is Lyric’s director of media relations. Prior to joining the company in 1992, she was a fulltime freelance journalist for The New York Times, Time, People, Chicago Tribune, and other publications.

Turandot Synopsis

ACT ONE
The people of Beijing hear a mandarin recite Princess Turandot's decree: she will marry only the nobleman who can correctly answer three riddles. All who fail will be executed. The latest unsuccessful candidate, the Prince of Persia, will die this very day when the moon rises. It is now evening, and the excited crowd is eager to wake Pu-Tin-Pao, the executioner. Many people are nearly trampled, including Timur, the exiled king of Tartary. A young man rushes to him — his son, Calaf, who embraces the old man joyfully. Timur explains that Liù, the slave who is accompanying him, has been his guide and support. When Calaf asks why she chose to share his father's suffering, Liù answers that it's because the prince once smiled at her.

Pu-Tin-Pao's assistants prepare for the execution, and children lead in the procession. When the crowd sees the Prince of Persia, its scorn turns to pity. When Turandot appears, her beauty dazzles Calaf. Once she signals to proceed with the execution, the Prince of Persia is heard crying her name, but his voice rises. It is now evening, and the excited crowd hears the third answer, it bursts with joy. Turandot implores her father not to yield his name before dawn, he will release her and give up his life. If she is unsuccessful, she will have no choice but to belong to him.

ACT TWO

Scene 1. Ping, Pang, and Pong prepare for what may be a wedding or a funeral, depending on Calaf’s success or failure. Life was always smooth in China, they reflect, until the birth of Turandot. Since then, many unlucky suitors have lost their lives. Each minister longs to leave Beijing and enjoy a quieter existence. They ruminate on how wonderful it would be if love finally conquered Turandot. All three depart, since the ceremony of the riddles is about to begin.

Scene 2. The crowd cheers the arrival of the ministers and wise men. When Calaf appears, he is addressed by Turandot’s father, Emperor Altoum, who cannot persuade the prince to abandon his desire to win Turandot. The mandarin again summarizes the law regarding Turandot’s marriage. When she finally appears, she reveals that she cannot forget the story of her ancestor, Princess Lo-u-Ling: many years before, a conqueror of China dragged Lo-u-Ling from the palace and killed her. Turandot now will not let herself to be possessed by any man.

The princess poses her three riddles, and each time Calaf answers correctly. When the crowd hears the third answer, it bursts with joy. Turandot implores her father not to yield her to the unknown prince, but Altoum insists that the law is sacred. Calaf now offers the princess a bargain: If Turandot can learn his name before dawn, he will release her and give up his life. If she is unsuccessful, she will have no choice but to belong to him.

ACT THREE

Scene 1. Turandot’s heralds proclaim that no one may sleep that night; the unknown stranger’s name must be revealed by morning. Alone in the palace garden, the prince repeats, “No one may sleep” and looks forward to the dawn, when Turandot will be his. The ministers offer him beautiful women, sparkling gems, and fabulous adventures, if he will leave Beijing. They are concerned for their own lives, since no one knows where Turandot may strike in her desperation to learn the stranger’s name.

City guards drag in Timur and Liù, whom they apprehended near the city walls. The crowd gathers before Turandot suddenly appears. She orders Timur to speak, and the guards are about to torture him when Liù declares that she alone knows the prince’s name and that she will keep it a secret. When Turandot orders that she be tortured, the guards twist her arms as Ping repeatedly demands the name, but she refuses to reveal it. When Turandot asks what gives her such strength, Liù answers that it is love. Before dawn, she says, her eyes will close forever and Turandot will love the prince. Seizing a dagger from a soldier, Liù stabs herself and falls lifeless. The stunned crowd carries her body away, accompanied by the heartbroken Timur, and leaving Turandot alone with Calaf.

Furious at her coldness, the prince tears away the veil covering Turandot’s face. Ignoring her insistence that he not touch her, he kisses her passionately. Overwhelmed by new feelings, Turandot confesses that she is weeping her first tears. She begs the prince to leave her, taking his mystery with him, but he declares that he will now give her both his name and his life: he is Calaf, son of Timur. The ecstatic Turandot commands that he appear before the people with her.

Scene 2. Before her father and the people of Beijing, Turandot declares that she now knows the stranger’s name: “His name is Love!” Calaf ascends the staircase to embrace Turandot as the crowd joyfully sings love’s praises.

Silvestrelli is a favorite at these venues, having also portrayed King Marko/Tristan und Isolde and King Henry/Lohengrin in Erl, and the Nightwatchman/Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg, Wurm/Luisa Miller, Pistola/Falstaff, the Grand Inquisitor/Don Carlo, Don Basilio/The Barber of Seville, and Sparafucile/Rigoletto in San Francisco. The bass’s achievements in Wagner and Verdi are mirrored by his successes in Mozart, including performances as the Commendatore/Don Giovanni (Lyric, La Scala, London, Bologna, Parma, Paris, Los Angeles, among many other companies), Sarastro (Philadelphia, Tel Aviv, Santa Fe), and Osmin (Lyric, San Francisco, Houston, Munich). Silvestrelli has recorded Donizetti’s rarely heard Adelia (CD, Haydn Orchestra), as well as Don Carlo (CD, La Scala Orchestra, Riccardo Muti conducting) and Rigoletto (DVD, Toscanini Foundation Orchestra). Among his previous high successes in concert have been Verdi’s Requiem (Siena, Sydney, Munich), Rossini’s Stabat Mater (Berlin), Mahler’s Symphony No. 8 (Amsterdam’s Concertgebouw), and Puccini’s Messa di Gloria (Hamburg).</td>

Turandot: Modernity, Orientalism, and Love
By Susan Halpern

“I wanted something human, and when the heart speaks, whether in China or Holland, it says only one thing, and the outcome is the same for everyone….”
— Giacomo Puccini, 1924

Puccini’s final opera, Turandot, written between 1920 and 1924, was widely considered a success, and yet most found its eponymous heroine truly enigmatic. In the intervening century, we’ve struggled to make sense of Turandot and the opera, and Puccini’s intentions. Turandot isn’t romantic and doesn’t follow the verismo tradition, with its emphasis on realistic stories about ordinary people who love each other with supreme passion. Instead, the opera seems to make assumptions that we, in the 21st century, find shocking and culturally insensitive. Dualities seem to underpin the tale, and its message seems elusive. Did Puccini favor one of his protagonists? Or did he die before he could decide how to complete this perplexing work? Understanding Puccini’s worldview may help unpack issues of cultural stereotypes, orientalism, and misogyny, which seem embedded in the work.

Turandot finds its source in Venetian dramatist Carlo Gozzi’s play, Turandotte (1762), itself taken from a Persian story in Les Mille et un jours by François Péris de la Croix (1721). Puccini was not the first to utilize the story for opera: his teacher, Antonio Joseph Bazzini, wrote Turanda (1867) and Ferruccio Busoni Turandot (1917). Puccini, who hadn’t heard Busoni’s opera, instructed his librettists, Giuseppe Adami and Renato Simoni, “Put all your strength into [the libretto], all the resources of your heads and hearts, and create for me something which will make the world weep. They say that emotionalism is a sign of weakness, but I like to be weak! To the strong, so-called, I leave the triumphs that fade; for us, those that endure.” That statement seems surprising indeed, considering what the opera and its heroine turned out to be.

Following Puccini’s death, the much-anticipated premiere of Turandot took place at Milan’s Teatro alla Scala on April 25, 1926. The opera had been completed by Franco Alfano, whom the Ricordi publishing house and conductor Arturo Toscanini commissioned to create the ending by shaping the extensive sketches Puccini had left. On opening night, however, after the death of Liu, Toscanini faced the audience and announced, “At this point the Master laid down his pen.” In his final music, Liu’s funeral procession, many critics would claim, Puccini remained true to himself, that is, to his pre-Turandot self.

Perhaps the biggest question the opera raises is whether Turandot, silent until Act Two, can be seen as emblematic of Puccini’s intentions for the meaning of the opera as a whole. With her coldness and rigid appearance, what cultural values does she represent? Are we meant to have compassion for her? What is Puccini saying about the apparent decline of the human in the Machine Age? Was he making a deliberate, if tentative, move towards updating his operatic style, exploring the ways in which opera might connect with modernist preoccupations evident in the other arts?

Turandot’s malice didn’t disturb the critics, but her mechanical nature did. Puccini didn’t intend us to empathize with her, making her the antithesis of what Italian operagoers expected. Identification with the characters had always been Italian opera’s goal, what audiences desired. Puccini said he planned “a Turandot filtered through the modern mind”; he intended her as a fitting emblem of her time.
In crafting her, Puccini drew on futurism, an avant-garde artistic and social movement founded in Milan in 1909, glorifying modernity and emphasizing technology over humanity. Turandot can be understood as fitting within the context of futurist Italian theater development. In the early 1920s, to be “mechanical” was to be modern, if inhuman. Inspired by the marionette-like figures of commedia dell’arte, puppets – literal and metaphorical – inhabited the stage; puppets, robots, and masked figures became avant-garde emblems. Futurist theater’s machine-like characters had a mechanistic style of declamation without human emotion.

In futurism, war and patriotism became linked themes. Michael Steinberg theorized, “The delivery of opera to spectacle is also its delivery to fascism, to its aesthetic of power through spectacle.” In Gozzi’s Turandotte, the crowds contained slave-women, eunuchs, soldiers, and priests; Puccini’s crowds were homeless Chinese needing leadership and direction, and could be analogized to post-World-War-I Italians awaiting a leader like Mussolini.

Puccini believed Italy needed Mussolini’s firm hand. Turandot seems to reinforce what fascists considered “deviant” women; “deviants” were femmes fatales or working women who challenged men by disobeying their husbands and remaining childless. Puccini described Turandot as a “tiny viperous woman” (“donna vipersina”) with the heart of a hysteric (“un cuore strano di isterica.”) The librettists gave her pride (“orgoglio”), a domineering attitude, an arrogant gaze, and imperious gestures, but the dramatic change that Turandot brought to Puccini’s operatic style troubled audiences and critics because it represented a retreat from the emotionalism of his gentle and suffering heroines (Butterfly, Mimì, Tosca), who had been a characteristic, integral aspect of his work. Puccini felt Italian culture was under attack as weak and “feminized” and aimed to counter this notion by elevating a strong, mechanistic, rigid Turandot.

Turandot contrasts strongly with the sympathetic slave, Liù. In her, Puccini created a character who (especially in her first aria, “Signore ascolta”), provided the lyricism listeners craved. Why must Liù die? Puccini’s librettists created this self-sacrificial heroine especially for him. Undoubtedly, the warm Liù represents Puccini’s past strengths, while cruel, mechanical Turandot points to a colder future. The contrast between Liù and Turandot artistically replicates the tension between traditionalism and modernism in the early twentieth century. Symbolically, must Liù die so that beauty will not haunt the living?

Gozzi’s play presented Turandot as purely malicious. Puccini retained essential parts of Gozzi’s version, although he and his librettists simplified its complicated plot and invented Turandot’s ancestress to justify her unremitting cold behavior. In Puccini’s version, Turandot gradually becomes more understandable and sympathetic, and as in a fairy tale, she is released from revenge’s stranglehold and restored to humanity with Prince Calaf’s kiss.

The play’s adherence to commedia dell’arte traditions included having actors wearing masks, negating their individuality. Gozzi’s work combined fantasy, caricature, and stock characters, which were paired with extravagant sets. He intended his play to illustrate the righteousness and power of all-conquering love. Puccini also employed masks as a significant element, paired with distinctive music evoking the jerky movements of marionettes. The German playwright Friedrich Schiller, who adapted Gozzi’s play, pointed out a puppet-like quality common to all Gozzi’s characters, not only those designated as masks: “The figures have the appearance of marionettes operated by wires; there is a certain pedantic stiffness running through the whole thing.” By the mid-1920s, puppets, robots, and masked figures had become avant-garde emblems, icons of a moment of cultural crisis, particularly appropriate for Puccini’s aims.

Puccini’s Ping, Pang, and Pong are derived from Gozzi’s masks; they act like a mini Greek chorus, observing and commenting, testing characters’ thoughts and motivations. In their trio in the first scene of Act Two, they remark on Turandot’s identity as the feminine destroyer of men, national identity, and culture. Puccini wanted authentic Chinese music not only for this trio but to use throughout. He wrote to Adami, “I shall get some old Chinese music...and drawings of different instruments which we shall put on the stage (not in the orchestra).” He took four melodies from J. A. van Aalst’s book Chinese Music and included melodies from a Chinese music box he received from his friend Baron Fassini Camossi, the former Italian ambassador to China, assigning the longest of the melodies to Ping, Pang, and Pong. He consulted ethno-musical texts, studied transcriptions of Chinese music, and listened to a large number of phonograph recordings of Chinese music; he assimilated elements from them, transforming them with his own personal idiom.

He expanded the traditional Chinese folk song “Mo-li-hua,” and treated it thematically throughout; it made its first and lengthiest appearance in Act One, in the children’s chorus; it’s heard every time Turandot appears and is repeated when Calaf cries out her name in Act One. Although Puccini used Chinese music for Chinese characters, he had no alternative but to write tonal music for the non-Chinese characters, which serves, metaphorically, to accentuate the exoticism of Turandot and the Europeanness of Calaf and Liù, especially evident in the Romantic music of Liù’s funeral cortege.

In Act One, Turandot’s muteness has dramatic logic but compounds her perceived inhumanity. In the second scene of Act Two, when she finally sings, she doesn’t reveal her character, although the story she tells justifies her behavior. Her hatred of men is passionately invoked when she recounts that a foreign prince raped and murdered her ancestor, Princess Lo-u-ling. She believes it her sacred duty to avenge that cruelty and plans revenge against all foreigners for the insult to Lo-u-Ling’s purity. Turandot has additional reason to resent men: in ancient Eastern cultural traditions, male-dominated society considered women inferior, at times en-slaving them or using them merely for sexual gratification.

Critics have pointed out that Italy’s colonialist attempts in Libya – its determination to impose Christian and classical identity onto that country’s Islamic and Arab identity and the issue of the colonizer-colonized relationship – are implicit symbolically in Puccini’s opera and are complicated by the racial and religious differences of Turandot and the Prince of Persia, Calaf, and Liù. The opera engages tensions and dichotomies at all levels: between the two principal women, between the human and the machine, between two stylistic manners, between past and present, between what Puccini may have intended and what the critics perceived. Contrasts between Calaf’s Central Asian identity and Turandot’s Chinese identity, between his exile and her stability, and between his humanity and her cruelty are central to the opera’s meaning.
Calaf’s role has great significance: he asserts his masculine authority when he solves Turandot’s riddles. Calaf’s initial marginalized masculine identity, a result of his being an exile, highlights what can be seen as Chinese “orientalization” of other cultures, a symbol of the racial theory that circulated in Italy in the early twentieth century.

Orientalism usually now refers to the West’s patronizing attitude toward Middle Eastern, Asian, and North African societies in the ways that the West imagines,emphasizes, exaggerates, and distorts their differences and cultures, often seeing them as a combination of exotic, backward, uncivilized, and even dangerous. (Implicit in orientalism is the belief that the West is rational and hence superior.) The display of Calaf’s humanity is set against Turandot’s inflexibility, her staunch Chinese identity, and her cruelty. Turandot’s allegiance to her ancestor and nation-state also reflects then-current Western imperialist and orientalist notions about China. The ministers, in their Act-Two trio “Ho una casa nell’ Honan,” explicitly reveal the racial thinking behind the comparison between Chinese and Central Asian identity. And yet, ironically, the character of Calaf thematically serves as a metaphor for the remaking of Italian masculinity and the building of an Italian empire. (Italy had annexed Eritrea [1890], declared Somalia a colony [1908], annexed Libya and the Dodecanese islands in Greece [1912, after the Italo-Turkish War].)

Puccini declared that uncovering “the monstrous passion of Turandot which she has smothered for so long beneath the ashes of her pride…is the goal of the opera.” He allowed Romantic sentiment to share the limelight with the grandiose, sumptuous, mechanistic, and exotic, but finally, he wanted gender, race, and nationalist issues to yield to universality, allowing geographical and cultural barriers to fall, toppled by the universal language of love, which conquers all.

Modern Match - Turandot

Heroes, princesses, trusty sidekicks, and true love make for the perfect fairytale. But when the princesses are too willful to be won over by their “knights in shining armor,” what happens? Turandot takes the notion of a classic fairytale and turns it on its head, with life-or-death stakes and a surprising journey to find love. This opera’s story is not foreign to the fairytale world, however, as it bears resemblance to the internationally popular DreamWorks animated feature, Shrek.

These two pieces take fairy-tale character tropes to a new level, bringing a fresh look to true love. The masculine hero in both pieces didn’t set out to be a savior – instead, he was undertaking a selfish mission. In Turandot, Calaf is the Prince of Tartary, who is hiding from discovery to avoid being killed or harmed. When he sees Turandot, he becomes transfixed with her beauty and wants to win her over for himself. The ogre Shrek is hiding in the swamp, hoping to be left alone. When his swamp is invaded, he goes to Lord Farquaad of Duloc, who agrees to evacuate the creatures if Shrek rescues Princess Fiona.

On these selfish missions, both characters end up putting their lives at risk. For Calaf to win Turandot’s hand, he has to correctly answer three riddles or he’ll be executed. Shrek has to defeat a fire-breathing dragon to rescue Fiona. The two men must put their lives on the line for what they want, and surprisingly, they both succeed! Yet the road ahead is not smooth. Luckily, they both have trusty sidekicks in their corners. Calaf has Liù, who’s willing to die to protect him. Shrek has Donkey, who willingly goes off on a dangerous mission to save the princess.

Speaking of princesses, Turandot and Fiona have more in common than their crowns. Both princesses are stubborn individuals; Turandot begs her father to not force her to marry Calaf, and Fiona refuses to be taken to Duloc except on her own terms. These women are in need of love, but they don’t mean to fall in love! Turandot is known to be cold as ice; she needs true love to allow her to feel emotion. Fiona needs true love’s kiss to keep her from alternating between human (during the day) and ogre (at night). In the end, the heroes prevail: Calaf wins over Turandot’s heart and teaches her how to love, while Shrek wins over Fiona, saving her from the dragon and marriage to Lord Farquaad. It seems happily ever after can exist for everyone after all!

The author, Lyric’s dramaturgy intern last summer, is in her senior year at the University of Minnesota.
The operas of Puccini are a rich mine for a stage director. The characters, their motivations, their emotions, and the world they inhabit are vividly described in the score. Furthermore, the composer’s innate theatricality means that marrying stage action to the musical drama is usually a happy and fulfilling process.

After the failure of his second opera, Edgar (which suffered from a weak libretto and flawed plot), Puccini took great pains to ensure that his operas were as strong dramatically as they were musically, insisting on many revisions to the libretti, and subjecting the score to the refiner’s fire in rehearsal. The result, in his mature operas, are pieces of musical theater that are involving and engrossing, but masterfully tight and economic in their construction.

With Turandot Puccini took a brave new direction, choosing a fairy tale of intense fantasy far from the verismo aesthetic of his earlier pieces. A score that acknowledged modernism, the highly developed form of late-19th-century opera, and a story by Carlo Gozzi rooted in the tradition of commedia dell’arte were the thrilling ingredients. Puccini challenged himself and his librettists, Simoni and Adami, to create something new and extraordinary.

However, the further the opera’s creators pushed the envelope, the more difficult it became to bring the opera to a satisfactory conclusion. The motivations of the heroine are understandable, informed as they are by the example of her ancestor, but her transformation by a forced kiss is unsatisfactory, unsavory, even unpalatable, particularly to a modern audience.

While one can try to dismiss this problem by explaining that Turandot is a fairy story, and anything is possible in a fairy story, it is nonetheless the case that the most enduring fairy stories (fantastical though they may be) remain very real in their understanding of humanity. This story fails that test.

Puccini struggled for four years to finish the opera, insisting on revision after revision of the libretto. Up to his death, he remained dissatisfied with the conclusion and text of the final scene. The version of that scene completed shortly afterwards by Alfano drew on the composer’s sketches, but they were subject to Alfano’s own extensive editing and musical taste. It cannot be said to represent the master’s vision -- particularly in the finale, which Puccini indicated would be reflective in nature, far from the Hollywood treatment given it by Alfano. While Alfano’s conclusion is musically thrilling, it leaves one feeling compromised.

Every production starts with the score, but in this case the score does not present a complete vision. Each company must choose which of the various endings which have been proposed since Puccini’s death to present, or indeed, to present it unfinished as it famously was at its premiere.

Furthermore, in the 21st century we cannot ignore either the misogynistic portrayal of the female characters or the racial stereotyping of the Chinese in the piece. While Puccini’s world would not have found this at all jarring, a contemporary audience cannot help but question the sexism and Orientalism inherent in the piece.

This presents us with a unique theatrical challenge. A production of Turandot is, to some extent, an exercise in creation as we try to find a fitting conclusion to the opera that eluded Puccini himself for so long, while presenting the story in a way that does not patronize.

As I write, it is still some weeks before rehearsals for this production begin, but very soon artists will fly in from around the country and the globe, bringing with them their own deep understanding of this work from years of study and other productions.

Questioning and discussion is a vital part of any rehearsal process, but never more so that with this opera.

As our job in the rehearsal room will be to listen carefully to the score, seek out the heartbeat of Puccini, and ultimately offer our own solution to the final unanswered riddle of Turandot.

After the Curtain Falls

When the performance is over, try discussing it with your companions and any other opera lovers you know! You can continue your pleasure in Turandot for hours – even days – by exchanging ideas about it. Here are some topics we can suggest:

- What did you find most fascinating about this production?
- Even though Turandot’s kingdom has conquered his own, why do you think Prince Calaf still falls in love with her? Is this a betrayal of his homeland?
- Turandot is known for being cold to love. Why does she not want to fall in love?
- Why does Liú choose not to reveal Calaf’s name to Turandot? Why does she remain faithful to him?
- What changes Turandot’s mind and melts her icy heart?
- “Nessun dorma” is one of the most famous arias in opera. When you heard it, what impressed you the most?
- This opera is also famous for its orchestration. Were there particular moments from the orchestra that you found especially striking?

(Left to right) Kallen Esperian as Liú, Alexander Anisimov as Timur, and Ben Heppner as Calaf: Turandot at Lyric, 1997/98 season.

Lyric Opera of Chicago

36 | December 5, 2017 - January 27, 2018
What is your role here at Lyric, and how long have you held the position?

I am the artistic services manager and I’ve worked at Lyric since 1984. I arrange travel and accommodations for artists, choreographers, designers, and conductors who travel here for the opera season. In addition to that, I am often the first stop for artists when they need assistance with something locally, such as finding a school for their child, booking hotel rooms for their families, scheduling doctors or massage appointments, etc. Essentially, I am the liaison between the artists and whatever they might need to make their time here at Lyric comfortable and successful.

What led you to work at Lyric?

I’ve always loved the arts and singing; I come from a family of opera-lovers. I majored in music in college, but realized after a few years that I preferred to work in the industry in a behind-the-scenes capacity. I decided to do a master’s program in arts administration at the University of Cincinnati’s College-Conservatory of Music. The director of my program had been a singers’ manager and knew Ardis Krainik, so he encouraged me to apply for an internship here. I was accepted, and began my internship in January of 1984. They hired me that summer and I’ve been here ever since.

What’s a typical day like for you?

The first thing I do is check to make sure the correct scheduling information is posted and up to date for the cast and crew. After that, I can typically be found booking travel and hotel arrangements, fielding lots of questions from artists or staff, and being alert to any artist coming in the stage door with questions or needs. If I’m there in the evening for a performance, I assist with making sure all of the artists (including chorus members) are here on time and that they are comfortable in their dressing rooms, while also helping out if anything unexpected arises.

What’s the most challenging aspect of your job?

It’s challenging to need to start the planning that goes into artist travel and lodging so far in advance, but it’s necessary. I have to communicate over different time zones with singers and their agents where there might be language barriers as well. It can take a surprisingly long time to arrange what at first seems a simple flight and apartment search. And then comes another huge challenge: weather! The day after New Year’s one season in the ‘90s, there was a huge winter storm that shut everything down, and we were to start rehearsals the next day for Romeo and Juliet. I was on the phone scrambling, trying to get everyone’s flight reorganized and ensuring that people would have enough time to rehearse. Every time there’s bad weather, it’s a nail-biter!

What keeps you committed to the work you do?

I’m a big opera geek; I love the art form and the atmosphere backstage. It’s satisfying to complete arrangements for all of these people so their lives here are enjoyable. That allows them to concentrate on what they’re here to do, which is rehearse, sing, and perform. They often have very specific needs about what kind of atmosphere they want to live in, and it’s gratifying to find them exactly what they’re looking for.

What’s something about your job that people might not know?

Sometimes my job includes dog-walking! If a production calls for an animal to be cast, the rehearsal department helps take care of it. I helped walk the three dogs for Der Rosenkavalier, which were housed backstage for every performance; same with the two goldens for Magic Flute. They had to be walked about 30 minutes before going on stage to avoid any accidents. It doesn’t happen often, but it’s fun when it does.

A favorite Lyric moment?

In 2004 during Lyric’s 50th Anniversary Gala, I was in the wings with Susan Graham while Frederica von Stade was onstage singing. Susan, who is the generation following von Stade, was overcome with emotion. The mutual admiration of these two incredible artists was amazing to witness.

Beyond opera, what are your other passions?

I enjoy listening to early music, which typically means music originating before the 1700s (i.e., medieval, Renaissance, etc.). I also love good food and trying new restaurants, and traveling is a big passion. In my free time, I’m a sucker for old Hollywood films like Mr. Deeds Goes to Town and the Thin Man movies from the 1930s. There’s nothing like the classics.

Like many children of her generation, Elizabeth Upjohn Mason was surrounded by classical music growing up. “When I was a little girl in the ‘30s, there was a lot of classical music on the radio. I mean it wasn’t just the Metropolitan Opera on Saturday afternoons; there was the NBC Symphony Orchestra with Arturo Toscanini and The Telephone Hour with Gladys Swarthout. We had music appreciation at my grade school. Music was very accessible. I went to my first opera when I was nine.”

Being a native of Lake Forest, that first opera was Aida at the Civic Opera House, though it predated Lyric Opera of Chicago’s residency here by several years. This visit marked the beginning of a lifelong relationship with opera, specifically opera – and those producing it – in this iconic building.

Betty dabbled in music performance herself, taking the obligatory piano lessons, not practicing, until she discovered the sweet sounds of the cello. Opera always enthralled her and she treasured her grandmother’s Rigoletto recording of the great Enrico Caruso’s Duke of Mantua. When Betty found herself as a contestant on the Quiz Kids, a 1940s game show that originated in Chicago, she aced the opera-related questions.

Clearly no dummy (only the brightest children were selected as participants on Quiz Kids), Betty enrolled in Northwestern University’s Medill School of Journalism, after meeting someone very significant at that university’s National High School Institute, more fondly known as the Cherubs. “I met my first husband, Burton Upjohn, at Northwestern. She was ebullient and delightful as the song leader, and she succeeded me as president. She was very sharp, very businesslike; a combination of musical gifts and organizational skills, showing early on her great potential as a leader. And we just kept track of each other, as friends do.

“In 1979, Ardis came to Kalamazoo and sang at our daughter’s wedding, which meant so much to me because she also had sung at our wedding. At that point, of course, she was really immersed in Lyric, and on the way from our house to the airport to fly back to Chicago, we had a chance to talk about the situation, which was a bit dire, financially. Ardis was very loyal to Lyric’s first general director, Carol Fox, and concerned about her health, but knew that she needed to step in. It was very hard for her.”

Distance and her husband’s illness kept Betty away from Chicago for many years, but one of the first things she did after his passing was to subscribe to Lyric. “I knew that it would be helpful and rewarding for me. Then five years after Burton’s death, I remarried, and my second husband, Lowell ‘Jerry’ Mason, was a very good musician. He had perfect pitch, and he had a 15-piece band in high school in Oak Park. He loved opera, so he also was blessed to get to know Ardis, which was lovely for us both.”

“Ardis [Krainik, Lyric’s second general director] and I were in the same sorority, Chi Omega, at Northwestern. She was ebullient and delightful as the song leader, and she succeeded me as president. She was very sharp, very businesslike; a combination of musical gifts and organizational skills, showing early on her great potential as a leader. And we just kept track of each other, as friends do.”

Betty continues to embody her dear friend’s kindness and generosity, supporting Lyric in addition to many worthy institutions in Kalamazoo. Betty’s impact in her home community, although perhaps inspired by Ardis, is a legacy all her own, and her munificence enriches the lives of many, particularly in arts education for children. We can all consider ourselves lucky to know women like Betty, and Ardis Krainik, who have markedly shaped the arts in the Midwest, and provided the next generation with the exposure they as young women were blessed to absorb readily and eagerly.

The Breaking New Ground Campaign was launched in January 2013 to implement the company’s blueprint for a world-class, twenty-first century opera company. This Campaign allows Lyric to continue to produce major productions of the highest caliber, update media, marketing, and audience development programs, and fortify Lyric’s endowment. The current focus of the Campaign is to modernize the stage of the Ardis Krainik Theatre with state-of-the-art equipment.

To that end, we have established a new Insull Society comprised of loyal patrons who are contributing $10,000 or more for this critically important stage project. To join the Insull Society, please call 312.827.5675.

(Title role/Turandot)

I can say without hesitation that my time in the Ryan Opera Center launched my singing career. I started the program as green as they come, and with the support of the coaching staff, Gianna Rolandi and Sir Andrew Davis, I was able to hone my craft and carve out a niche for myself that has allowed me to sing all over the world! I had some amazing moments on and off stage during my three-year tenure, but I would have to say my favorite was going on as Annina, Violetta’s maid, in La traviata. It was actually my Lyric stage debut, and Violetta was being sung by the amazing Renée Fleming! Getting to be on stage with her and watch her from the wings was indescribable—plus, I got my own dressing room with my name on the door! There are so many things I can say and share about this outstanding and remarkable program, the most important being THANK YOU! Thank you to everyone at Lyric for taking me on and giving me memories and opportunities that have completely changed my life!
