Lyric
At Lyric, you’ll be amazed, replenished, and inspired with must-see, must-hear live experiences. Through the timeless power of voice, acting that brings characters to life in triumph and tragedy, the splendor of a great orchestra and chorus—coupled with theater, dance, design, and truly magical stagecraft—Lyric is devoted to immersing audiences in worlds both familiar and unexpected, creating shared experiences that resonate long after the curtain comes down.
Welcome to your Lyric
Welcome to the Chicago premiere of Fire Shut Up in My Bones.

When this important new work—based on the memoir by The New York Times columnist Charles M. Blow—debuted at Opera Theatre of Saint Louis in 2019, many of us were there to see it come alive. We are proud to bring this moving, poignant, powerful, and deeply affecting new American opera from jazz luminary and composer Terence Blanchard and celebrated director, screenwriter, and librettist Kasi Lemmons to Chicago audiences.

Lyric has a renewed commitment to new and contemporary works that will be seen over many seasons to come. New work gives us the opportunity to share important untold stories that reflect our shared humanity, to engage some of the most exciting and diverse creative minds of our time, and to affirm the future of opera itself by rooting it in our relevant, contemporary world.

In upcoming seasons, Lyric will present:

- The world premiere of *The Factotum, by Will Liverman—Ryan Opera Center alumnus and star of Fire Shut Up in My Bones—and dynamic DJ/producer King Rico. The Factotum, inspired by The Barber of Seville, is a completely original work set in a Black barbershop on Chicago’s South Side. An irresistibly upbeat marriage of gospel, funk, rap, hip-hop, R&B and more, it redefine opera can be.

- Proximity, a trio of works commissioned by Lyric, directed by Yuval Sharon, and curated by our Special Projects Advisor Renée Fleming from three sets of composer/librettist teams. This gripping new work zooms in and out on issues that face us today as individuals, as communities, and as global citizens, in a single, thought-provoking performance experience.

- Two operas by the celebrated team of composer Missy Mazzoli and librettist Royce Vavrek: the North American premiere of The Listeners, based on the Jordan Tannahill novel about how far individuals will go to find a sense of place and purpose; and Proving Up, a powerfully supernatural story of Nebraska homesteaders in the 1870s, in a production by James Darrah that was originally to be presented in Lyric’s 2021/22 Season.

As we look forward to these new works with great anticipation, we remember that every time-honored masterpiece that we love today was originally brand new to audiences. How exciting it is to be a part of the creation of works that will live on and tell the stories of our times, our struggles, and our triumphs for opera audiences to experience for generations to come.

Thank you for being with us on this journey.

Opera Forever! Lyric Forever!

Compared with most of the operatic canon, filled as it is with centuries-old compositions from old Europe, Fire Shut Up in My Bones is a mere toddler. But the work emblematizes a movement in the opera world, a fast shift toward bringing the new inside the grandest houses and onto the biggest stages.

That’s especially true here in the home of Lyric Opera of Chicago, where Fire takes its place in a growing line of young operas Lyric has helped bring to audiences. Prominent in that cadre is of course the grandly scaled Bel Canto, a Lyric commission whose 2015 premiere garnered international notice. Dead Man Walking was a riveting highlight of the pre-pandemic season, and today there are numerous projects actively in development. Lyric is recognizing the urgent nowness of our artistic moment, a time when the stories and issues confronting people outside the opera house should undeniably be let in.

“I believe opera is for everyone,” says Anthony Freud, Lyric’s General Director, President & CEO. “Lyric has an unswerving commitment to exploring the great works of the operatic repertoire, mining their power and relevance. But I understand that the heritage repertoire may not have obvious appeal to everyone. I want us to find and create new works that will both thrill the existing opera lover and intrigue and excite people who have never been in the building before.”

Chicago, a city always building, matches the impulse for new opera like train wheels fit their tracks, says Lyric’s Music Director, Enrique Mazzola. “It is part of Chicago’s DNA to advocate for the new,” he says. “Modern and contemporary art of every type has long been a vibrant part of the city—I find that unique in the world.”

Seeing Ourselves: New Work at Lyric by Graham Meyer

Beginning with the 2019/20 season, Freud announced a bold initiative: to stage a contemporary, English-language opera on the mainstage every season. Dead Man Walking (2000), an adaptation of Sister Helen Prejean’s account of one man’s passage through death row, was the first. George Benjamin’s Lessons in Love and Violence (2018) succumbed to pandemic cancellations, making Fire the second installment to reach the stage.

Audiences see their worlds echoed in the new work. “I want the subject matters of operas in this series to resonate powerfully with contemporary communities,” Freud said during the run-up to the Lyric performances of Dead Man Walking. Just as Mozart’s contemporaries would see as relevant and topical the anti-aristocracy revolutionary attitudes underpinning The Marriage of Figaro, so too do we see the death penalty, the abuse of political power, or issues of sexuality today.

Behind the jazz, choreography, and flashbacks in Fire resides the classic operatic framework of the Bildungsroman—a story dealing with one person’s identity and development. Fire depicts recognizably modern-day characters, traveling through lives close to our own in time and space. The main character is based not only on a recognizable person, but one who is also still alive: Charles M. Blow, The New York Times columnist whose memoir provided the source material for the opera. “How often do we get a chance as performers to tell stories about people who are still with us?” says Will Liverman, the baritone who plays Charles.
Indeed the dynamic between character and living man led to some uncanny moments. Liverman and Blow met at a photo shoot to promote the opera, giving Liverman the rare opportunity to interact with and examine the inspiration for his character. He observed him to be a careful observer, appropriately enough.

Then the personas switched. “We did a talkback where I actually had to sing in front of him—Charles’s aria—which is so surreal to live in a character, and there is the person, right there,” Liverman says. “After the opening, one of his kids came up to me and said, ‘You did a great job portraying my father.’ When do we hear that after a show?”

In another opportunity available when a piece’s creator is still alive, Fire composer Terence Blanchard made changes to the score after the show’s premiere in St. Louis to adapt it to the new casts and larger houses it would see at Lyric and the Met. The work can still live and breathe with the principals available to adapt it, expanding or contracting according to the needs of the performers and the venues.

Liverman, an alumnus of Lyric’s Patrick G. and Shirley W. Ryan Opera Center, brings more new work to Lyric in the 2022/23 Season, as co-creator of The Factotum, a “soul opera” set in a South Side barbershop, based loosely on opera’s most famous barber, Figaro from The Barber of Seville. The DJ and producer King Rico is collaborating with Liverman to develop an upbeat show embracing wide-ranging musical styles, from R&B, rap, and gospel to traditional barbershop.

The approaching 2022/23 mainstage season also features a ground-breaking, tripartite project titled Proximity, putting on display some of the most important artists of our time: composer Daniel Bernard Roumain working with acclaimed playwright and actress Anna Deavere Smith as librettist, for Git Here; Caroline Shaw, as composer and co-librettist with Jocelyn Clarke for Four Portraits; and John Luther Adams, setting a text by the late poet John Haines for Night. Yuval Sharon oversees the project as director, his first with Lyric since the Götterdämmerung-in-a-parking-garage pandemic fantasy Twilight: Gods. Renée Fleming, Lyric’s Special Projects Advisor and a prime force behind the Bel Canto premiere, curated Proximity.
Lyric has also announced several other contemporary works in the production pipeline. Omar tells the story of Omar ibn Said, a real-life Islamic scholar from West Africa who was captured and enslaved in the United States in the early 19th century. The opera’s creative forces include Michael Abels, the film composer behind Get Out and Us, and the versatile musician and performer Rhiannon Giddens, founder of the Carolina Chocolate Drops and the recipient of a MacArthur “genius” grant.

And two works by Missy Mazzoli, a former Chicago Symphony Orchestra composer-in-residence, await their Lyric productions. Proving Up, a supernatural examination of the American dream (turned nightmare) among homesteaders in 19th-century Nebraska, would have premiered this past January but was postponed. Lyric plans to return to it in a future season. The other, The Listeners, concerns a community of people who can hear a hum in their hometown and are swept up by a charismatic, cult-like leader. Both works feature a libretto by Mazzoli’s frequent collaborator Royce Vavrek.

All of which adds up to a lot of art that Chicago hasn’t seen before—except, of course, in the parts of the new operas that mirror our modern lives. The new works may not have the no-need-to-read-the-synopsis familiarity of the old guard, but the odds are that some of them will populate the next generation of that canon.
The New York Times columnist Charles M. Blow’s widely acclaimed memoir is the source for this extremely moving story of his traumatic youth in Louisiana. What an amazing collection of talent — composer Terence Blanchard, one of the most influential figures in American jazz; librettist Kasi Lemmons, director of such remarkable films as Harriet and Eve’s Bayou; and a topflight cast including many of America’s most brilliant singing actors. Fire Shut Up in My Bones is an opera for today, revealing the Black experience in this country as few other operas have done.

Act one
Charles Blow, age 20, drives down a Louisiana backroad with a gun in the passenger seat. Destiny sings to him, calling him back to his childhood home. He begins reliving memories from his childhood.

Charles’s seven-year-old self, Char’es-Baby, talks to his mother, Billie. He is desperate for affection, but Billie is too frazzled to give him the validation that he craves. They are dirt poor. Billie works in a chicken factory, but she dreams of Char’es-Baby getting a good education and escaping their town. Her husband, Spinner, is a womanizing spendthrift. When she hears that he’s flirting with other women, she confronts him at gunpoint. Billie doesn’t shoot, but she tosses Spinner out. Billie and her five sons move in with Uncle Paul. Char’es-Baby dreams of a different life, collecting “treasure” from the junkyard while Loneliness sings to him. One day, his cousin Chester comes to visit. When Chester sexually abuses him, he is too horrified and ashamed to say anything. Adult Charles begins to weep as he recoils from these memories, while Destiny reminds him that there is no escape.

INTERMISSION

Act two
As Charles grows into a teenager, he is full of confusion and rage, and tormented by phantom terrors. He attends a church service in which the pastor is baptizing people, promising that God can wipe all sins clean. Charles decides to get baptized, but it fails to free him of his inner demons. Charles tries to talk to his brothers, but they refuse to engage in any “soft talk.” Loneliness reappears, promising to be his lifelong companion. Evelyn, a beautiful young girl, interrupts Charles’s reverie. Their chemistry is clear. Charles feels a new sense of independence and is finally ready to strike out on his own; Grambling State University has offered him a full scholarship. Billie is left alone to reflect on all that she has sacrificed for her family and wonders what might lie ahead.

Act three
At his college, Charles rushes a fraternity, where the brothers lead an elaborate and energetic step dance. Charles and the other pledges are hazed, but he stoically takes each indignity in stride: Pain is nothing new for him. Later, he goes to a frat party and meets an attractive young woman, Greta. They begin a passionate love affair. Charles eventually shares his awful secret with Greta, only to find out that she’s still seeing someone else. Charles is left alone again. He calls home, desperate to hear his mother’s voice. To his shock, Billie tells him that Chester has come back to visit. Charles instantly decides to return home to confront Chester, gun in hand.

Charles sits in his car on the dark road, contemplating the choice lying before him. Destiny starts to sing to him once again, seductively promising to stand by him through to the bloody end. As Charles reaches his childhood home, Char’es-Baby appears, urging him to leave his bitterness behind. Charles must decide whether to exact his revenge or begin his life anew.

Artist profiles

TERENCE BLANCHARD | COMPOSER

Lyric debut

The celebrated American composer’s Fire Shut Up in My Bones premiered at Opera Theatre of Saint Louis in 2019 and was staged at the Metropolitan Opera in 2021, the first production by a Black composer in the company’s 136-year history. From his expansive work composing the scores for Spike Lee films ranging from the documentary 4 Little Girls to the epic Malcolm X, as well as his own discography of recordings such as A Tale of God’s Will (A Requiem for Katrina), the 2018 USA Fellow and six-time Grammy-winning trumpeter/composer has been a consistent artistic force for making powerful musical statements concerning painful American tragedies—past and present. A brilliant trumpeter, Blanchard started his career in 1982 as a member of the Lionel Hampton Orchestra, then The Jazz Messengers. He has composed more than 40 film scores and performed on more than fifty. He has been nominated for two Academy Awards and has won six Grammy Awards from 14 nominations. In 2019 he was named Endowed Chair in Jazz Studies at UCLA.

Blaze of Glory

by Naomi André

Lyric Opera’s presentation of Terence Blanchard’s Fire Shut Up in My Bones—an expanded version co-commissioned with the Metropolitan Opera and LA Opera—takes its place in the rich history of vernacular popular, religious, and classical art music traditions in Chicago. Based on The New York Times columnist Charles M. Blow’s 2014 memoir of the same title, this is the second opera by a Black compositional team that has appeared at Lyric. The first took place in 1997, with the premiere of Anthony Davis’s Lyric commission Amistad (with libretto by Thulani Davis), an opera based on historical events about the African diaspora and the middle passage slave trade across the Atlantic. As with Amistad, Fire brings several major Black artists to Lyric in their debuts: leading singers Latonia Moore, Brittany Renee, Chauncey Packer, and co-director/choreographer Camille A. Brown. This production also celebrates two Patrick G. and Shirley W. Ryan Opera Center alums: Will Liverman (in the central role) and Chris Kenney (Chester).

Fire Shut Up in My Bones is part of a much longer trajectory of operatic contributions by Black composers, librettists, singers, and collaborating artists. From the 19th century’s Elizabeth Taylor Greenfield and Sissieretta Jones (two of the best-known Black opera singers of their time) and the composers Henry Lawrence Freeman, Scott Joplin, William Grant Still, and many others, Black artists had been creating and singing opera long before Marian Anderson’s historic debut as Ulrica in Verdi’s Un ballo in maschera at the Metropolitan Opera on January 7, 1955. That performance became a symbolic desegregation of opera, as houses in the U.S. and Europe thereafter began to let Black singers onto their stages. Just five years after its founding, Lyric welcomed Leontyne Price on its stage in 1959 as Liù in Puccini’s Turandot and in the title role in Massenet’s Thaïs.

Over the past several decades, works of Black opera composers—notably Davis’s X, The Life and Times of Malcolm X (1986)—have ushered in a new generation to which Blanchard belongs. In addition to Amistad at Lyric in 1997, Davis’s many operas include the Pulitzer Prize-winning The Central Park Five (2019). Recent years have brought the premieres of many more important operas by Black composers, including Nkeiru Okoye’s Harriet Tubman: When I Crossed that Line to Freedom (2014), George Lewis’s Afterword (2015), about the founding of Chicago’s Association for the Advancement of Creative Musicians, and Daniel Bernard Roumain’s We Shall Not Be Moved (2017).

While Blanchard is no stranger to opera, he is better known as a celebrated jazz trumpeter and film score composer, winning Grammy Awards for his jazz recordings and collaborating frequently with film director Spike Lee—as a trumpet player in Lee’s early movies and as the film score composer for many others. (He was nominated for an Academy Award last year for his score to Lee’s Da 5 Bloods. ) He has worked with other film directors over the years and created the music for two recent films that have trenchantly documented important Black historical figures and experiences: One Night in Miami… (2020) and Harriet (2019), the latter a collaboration with Lemmons, who directed the award-winning movie. “With Harriet, there was no other composer I could imagine,” Lemmons says. “I wanted a big American sound and a lush, full, heroic score.” But their partnership goes back even further, beginning with Lemmons’s first film, Eve’s Bayou (1997) and continuing with several of her other movies. Bringing her experience as an actress, screenwriter, film director, and opera lover to her work on Fire, Lemmons’s libretto—her first—breathes a penetrating drama into this nuanced story. Here, as in all her films, Lemmons shows her mastery at weaving together sophisticated community scenes and intimate hidden stories.

Fire is Blanchard’s second opera and the second commissioned from him by Opera Theatre of Saint Louis, where James Robinson is Artistic Director (also making his debut at Lyric, as co-director). Blanchard’s first, Champion (2013), which he calls an “opera in jazz,” was about the boxer Emile Griffith (1938-2013), who was haunted both by his bisexuality and his brutal knockout of Benny Paret in 1962, which put Paret in a coma and led to his death ten days later. “Champion was such a success that on opening night we immediately asked Terence to write another opera for us,” Robinson says. “It took a while to land on a subject that really inspired Terence, but then one day his wife and I both read an article in The New York Times by Charles Blow that previewed his forthcoming memoir. We thought Charles’s story would make a wonderful opera, and Terence immediately responded to the idea.”

When Blow met with Blanchard to discuss the idea of an opera, Blow remembers, “Terence and I just talked. I knew his work. We’re both from Louisiana and the whole thing. My thought was, as long as it ends properly, go for it.” The opera condenses the book and embraces the texture and rhythms of young Charles’s life growing up in the small town of Gibsland, Louisiana—the love of his mother and siblings, the secret of his sexual abuse at the hands of two extended family members, and his path through recognizing the trauma and finding a way forward.

A theme that links Blanchard’s two operas is their portrayal of Black men in the public eye whose bisexuality leads to bullying, shame, trauma, and inner turmoil. Both operas involve the past and the present coming together as their protagonists age, and use different singers to represent the boy and the mature man.

“The role of Charles is so intense, so raw. It just grabs you immediately,” says Liverman, who headlines the production. “It’s the journey of finding a way to stand, two feet planted on the ground, and say, ‘This is who I am.’ A way of living with that truth and not being afraid to display it.”

In working out how best to portray Charles’s complicated inner life in her libretto, Lemmons took inspiration from a conversation with Robinson, who she says opened her mind to the freedom and possibilities available in opera. “One of the things he said that really sank in was that, in opera, anything can sing,” she remembers. “I really embraced that. So first I thought that the trees could sing, and then I took that a step further and thought, well, maybe his loneliness can sing.” In the end, one of the two principal female roles (sung by soprano Brittany Renee) encompasses three characters: Greta, a love interest of Charles’s, and the forces of Destiny and Loneliness. The other primary female role is Charles’s mother, Billie, portrayed by soprano Latonia Moore.

Another important part of Charles’s journey takes place during his time at Grambling State, a historically Black university, where he joins a Black fraternity known for its step shows. Given the college scenes in Act III, co-director and choreographer Brown knew that she wanted to include a step dance—bringing that tradition into a context where, even during the lifetimes of some members in today’s audiences, Black people were not even allowed on the stage. “I thought it was especially important,” she says. “We are talking about a step that comes from the rich history of the African diaspora.”

When Blanchard was growing up in New Orleans, his father—a singer who loved classical music—wanted his son to be involved with opera. “He was an amateur baritone, and he really wanted to be an opera singer,” Blanchard says. “When he was a younger kid in the 1930s and 1940s, you know, he wasn’t given opportunities to do that.” When James Robinson asked Blanchard to write his first opera, Blanchard was moved to tears. “Right then, I could see my dad up in heaven going, ‘I told you. I told you!’” he says. “I kept thinking about how this is really the life he wanted.”

Fire Shut Up in My Bones is an opera that encompasses multitudes. Blanchard’s style of bringing jazz, gospel, and blues together creates a dynamic but lyrical operatic world that both propels the drama and allows it to bloom. The story has painful and tender moments, spanning the last third of the 20th century and into the present day, a period during which the United States has witnessed rapid yet uneven changes in attitudes about manhood, sexuality, and their intersections with race. Brown sums up the nature and importance of the story by describing it as “a Black experience. And people need to see as many Black experiences as possible.”

Yet power and violence around sexual encounters are, tragically, everyone’s experiences in some way, whether through bullying, harassment, and assault directly, or as a bystander, friend, or loved one.
BEING MOVED: Black Music in Chicago

It is no surprise that Chicago, among the main destinations of the Great Migration (when African Americans in vast numbers moved north after Reconstruction), has long been an important vortex for Black music production. The city is well known for its own Blues iterations, early Jazz at the start of the 20th century, and the 1960s modern jazz style developed in the Association for the Advancement of Creative Musicians (the AACM is still active today). Also renowned is the celebrated birth of gospel at Thomas Dorsey’s Pilgrim Baptist Church on the South Side.

In the traditional concert hall, Chicago has nurtured the talents of several significant Black women composers. In 1933 the Chicago Symphony Orchestra premiered Florence Price’s Symphony 1 in E minor (the first major orchestra to perform a work by a Black woman composer). Margaret Bonds (Price’s student and colleague), Betty Jackson King, and Regina Harris Baiocchi (still working) are among the best known, and bring this legacy up to the present. In 2004 Chicago was the only city in the US to host Opera Africa with the performance of Princess Magogo kaDinizulu by South Africa’s leading classical composer, Mzilikazi Khumalo (presented by the Ravinia Festival).

witnessing the damage and struggle for healing. “It’s a very human, very relatable piece,” Robinson says. “There’s a lot of societal pressure that Charles deals with, and even if someone hasn’t been the victim of abuse, they can understand what it’s like to be different, to be an outsider, and all the trials that go along with that.”

“I think that there’s a space for everybody to walk away feeling some kind of universal theme, within this very specific story,” Brown adds.

Blanchard also sees a larger message within the particular contours of Blow’s memoir. “Anybody who comes to see this will understand what Charles persevered through, and we know he’s still working and he’s still productive,” he says. “The story’s not finished—this is just one chapter.” The powerful new stories of contemporary Black operas bring together individual private experiences that communicate the shared humanity in all of us and provide a charge for the future of the art form. Seeing a work like Fire on the great opera stages of the world “is something that can help propel some other little kids forward into wanting to become composers,” Blanchard says. “And that’s my hope. That’s my dream.”

Co-director’s note

James Robinson

When I became artistic director at Opera Theatre of Saint Louis in 2009, among my first priorities was to embark on a wide-ranging commissioning initiative called New Works, Bold Voices. The objective was to create new operas and to provide opportunities for composers to take a second look at operas they had already premiered. One of the first composers I contacted was jazz trumpeter Terence Blanchard. I was well acquainted with Terence’s music from his powerful film scores, and I still consider his haunting album A Tale of God’s Will one of the best things in my personal music library. After our first meeting, Terence agreed to create an “opera in jazz,” and in 2013, we premiered Champion, based on the life of bisexual boxing champ Emile Griffith. The success of Terence’s opera was tremendous, so I immediately asked him to follow it up with another. Fire Shut Up in My Bones was premiered in 2019 in St. Louis, opened the season for the Met in 2021 and, yet again, it was met with great enthusiasm.

Both of Terence’s operas deal fearlessly with Black men struggling with their identity and sexuality, in addition to confronting some very difficult and often painful subjects. The story of Emile Griffith is told through the fog of pugilistic dementia and confronts the athlete’s search to embrace his love of other men. As Emile sings in the opera (after being haunted by the death of an opponent he killed during a bout): “I kill a man, and the world forgives me. I love a man, and the world wants to kill me.” Charles M. Blow’s elegant and gripping memoir Fire Shut Up in My Bones reveals a man haunted by the abuse he suffered at the hands of an older cousin and how coming to terms with his own sexuality became a lifelong journey. And while not everyone has experienced the reality of growing up poor in rural Louisiana, Blow’s memoir touches on universal themes that are both resonant and relevant. In both operas, an honest light is shone on taboos, social norms, and stereotypes. And what I find particularly moving is how Terence uses music to give these characters compelling voices.

In the opera, Charles is faced with a brutal choice and looks back on his life to understand what has led him to a potentially life-ruining crossroads. He questions his role in certain traumatic events and wonders how he could have changed the course of his own personal history. His is a journey of self-loathing, self-discovery, and eventually self-forgiveness. Charles states that he is a “stranger in my hometown,” and I find this idea deeply affecting, for many of us have felt the loneliness of not fitting in or not belonging, even in an environment that should be comforting and familiar.

While preparing Fire Shut Up in My Bones, one of the challenges was how to adapt Kasi Lemmons’s gorgeously cinematic libretto to the stage. Early on, Kasi and I talked about how a memoir is like a collection of old photographs. With that in mind, the creative team and I—now joined by co-director and choreographer Camille A. Brown—set out to create a fluid, multi-layered, almost collage-like production. I cannot say enough about how thrilled I am to be involved in this historic production and to work with this extraordinary composer, librettist, and cast.

Contributing my voice to Terence Blanchard’s beautiful and haunting music, creating movement language for Kasi Lemmons’s libretto, sharing the story of celebrated writer Charles M. Blow, and co-directing with James Robinson has been a dream. It has also been uniquely challenging, because I joined the Fire Shut Up in My Bones project at the height of the pandemic, five years after work began on the original production. Not only did I have to choreograph, I had to find my directorial voice, among a team that had been collaborating for years. It was daunting, thrilling, and overwhelming to play catch-up. I started with what I know—dance—and approached the piece the same way I approach all of my creative work—asking questions, investigating, and listening. How could I make sure that the gestures and movements stayed true to the intentions of the composer? How could my direction amplify the voice and the heart of this piece?

In the director’s seat, I wanted to play with abstraction and time travel, capturing the psyche of Charles, his inner turmoil, and his tussles with Destiny and Loneliness. We treated each scene as though it were one of those aged Polaroid pictures—static in time, with the only breath being Charles, walking us through his journey, the pictures shapeshifting as we follow him along. Isolated both spiritually and physically, it was important to show Charles’s struggles, his longing for peace, and his search for a savior—only to realize that his savior was himself, the younger version of himself, giving him grace and resolve.

Two phrases within the show resonate with me: “Sometimes you gotta’ just leave it in the road” and “I bend, I don’t break, I sway.”

They speak to the specificity of the Black experience but also call upon a universal theme of determination and the need for personal resolution. Charles experienced a traumatic childhood event, which changed his life. He ultimately finds the strength and motivation to “leave it in the road.” Past traumas can either haunt us or heal us. Charles’s story empowers us with the understanding that the devastation of the past does not have to define our futures. We too can give ourselves the grace to let go. Fire also illuminates themes of perseverance and resilience—both hallmarks of the Black experience. We don’t break, we sway. We never give in. Our light will never go out. To honor this, I wanted to find a way—amid the struggle—to elevate the stuff of the Black experience that celebrates us. That heals us. That shows us off.

Terence has created a percussive score that is complex and nuanced, and I have tried to add to that my original artistic expression in movement, bringing to bear the many influences and elements that make up my individual style. What I found so thrilling was that I could use step to embody triumph, pain, and the joy of life, and create a rhythmical score for this powerful “opera in jazz.” Step is a social dance rooted in African American history and culture, tracing back more than 200 years to West Africa, transformed by enslaved people throughout the Americas. Stepping is energetic, visceral, urgent, and powerful. It is also embedded in the fabric of Black fraternities and sororities, which were intentionally created as safe spaces when white Greek-letter organizations would not let Black men and women join them. It has always been historically important for Black people to create safe spaces for themselves. What has emerged from that has been extraordinary: Black people creating community for themselves everywhere—in the Church, at the jook joint, and at historically Black colleges and universities. In these safe spaces, we converge to share all that is messy and radiant in our lives, in our relationships, and in our humanity.

I am humbled and honored to be a part of this show that is inviting audiences into a vulnerable and poignant story.

At one point in history, Black people were not allowed to perform on stages like this one and, even more so, were not able to authentically portray our own narratives. The full spectrum of our real lives were unseen. But we did not break. Once invisible, now beautifully and vibrantly visible. Past, present, and future, we sway.

Beyond the stage
The Magic Victrola

This April 24th, audiences will be delighted by The Magic Victrola, a charming story that brings some of opera’s most beloved arias to life for audiences of all ages in this one-afternoon-only special performance.
This fully-staged production made its premiere a few seasons ago to critical and audience acclaim. Its recently announced revival demonstrates Lyric’s commitment to engaging music lovers of all ages. Designed for patrons 5 to 10 years old—and, of course, their grown escorts—The Magic Victrola has a broad and dazzling appeal. “The audience loved it all,” wrote the Chicago Sun-Times of the premiere. “The future of this magical and multifaceted art form had another great boost.”

The Magic Victrola adventure begins when Gracie and Sam are dropped off at their Grandpa’s place for summer vacation. While at first the kids are less than excited to be without their modern comforts, things get much more interesting when they discover their grandfather’s old victrola, and his prized collection of opera records suddenly come to life! With the help of the mysterious birdman, Papageno, Gracie and Sam are off on a musical adventure through some of opera’s most delightful hits.

Lyric is eager to welcome the Chicago community to experience the magic of live opera performance on Sunday, April 24. “This will be an introduction to the world of opera for many of our youngest audience members, so we want to make it as accessible and enjoyable as possible. The vibrant sets and costumes bring the opera stories to life. The Magic Victrola is our opportunity to open the doors of Lyric and invite audiences of all ages to experience the excitement of the art form,” says Vice President of Lyric Unlimited Robert C. Goodwin. “Lyric is always seeking opportunities to engage new audiences in Chicago and to offer unique artistic experiences.”

The Chicago Tribune noted that the premiere had “a sizable audience of kids and their elders giggling and applauding in merry discovery.” It’s a thrilling afternoon, re-discovering old favorites with those who are hearing some of opera’s glories for the very first time.

The Magic Victrola features highlights and excerpts from some of the repertoire’s most beloved works, including The Magic Flute, The Tales of Hoffmann, The Elixir of Love, Delibes’s Lakmé, Gianni Schicchi, and Carmen among others. Casting will feature some of the extraordinary artists from Lyric’s Patrick G. and Shirley W. Ryan Opera Center—stars in the making—along with members of the Lyric Opera Orchestra and other performers.

This special presentation of The Magic Victrola also features affordably priced tickets. At $5 for children and $10 for adults, it is, quite literally, affordable family fun.

Lyric prioritizes the health and safety of our audiences and artists. All audience members will need to show proof of fully vaccinated status and remain masked at all times within the opera house. We regret that children not yet eligible for vaccination will not be able to attend this production.

We look forward to welcoming you, your family, and friends to this special performance of The Magic Victrola.

WHAT IS YOUR ROLE AT LYRIC, AND HOW LONG HAVE YOU HELD THIS POSITION?
I am the Director of Group Sales in the Marketing Department, and this May will mark my five-year anniversary with the company.

WHAT LED YOU TO WORK AT LYRIC?
Prior to working at Lyric, I was the Senior Manager for Tourism Marketing at Macy’s. When the company went through a restructure in 2017, my only option was to move to New York City, and since I had recently bought my first home and had my first baby, a move wasn’t ideal. I took a risk, left the company, and started my search. When I heard about an opening to manage group sales for Lyric, I honestly thought that sounded like a long shot. Unlike so many of my Lyric colleagues, I did not have a background in the arts or non-profits and definitely was not a singer or musician. I was a retail marketing professional in corporate spaces and never thought Lyric would even look at my resume. But they did! Oftentimes as professionals we get boxed into a category based on our previous jobs and to have this opportunity to learn a completely new industry has been amazing.

WHAT’S A TYPICAL DAY LIKE FOR YOU?
Every day is different, especially since the pandemic. I service groups of 10 or more, which includes seniors, schools, alumni organizations, friends & family. My priority is to provide the best customer service whether I am answering an inquiry or finalizing order details. I also create marketing and outreach plans, and I am always strategizing ways to bring in new audiences through grassroots outreach. In addition to the day to day, I often attend educational networking events and trade shows with colleagues. I also travel to sales trade shows where I meet with prospective tour planners coming to Chicago and encourage them to bring their groups to Lyric. Once my day job ends, I then start my most challenging job, as a mom. Homework, dinner, activities, and the list goes on!

WHAT’S THE MOST CHALLENGING ASPECT OF YOUR ROLE?
The pandemic has brought such a range of challenges. The key demographics I work with are seniors and students, both of whom have been impacted tremendously. My goal when working with these groups is to keep them up to date with Lyric’s current policies to keep them safe when attending a performance.

TELL US ABOUT YOUR RELATIONSHIP WITH INTERNATIONAL AUDIENCES AND HOW YOU CULTIVATE THOSE RELATIONSHIPS.
I had the honor of working with many international tour operators when we were planning Lyric’s new Ring Cycle for the spring of 2020. I researched presentations of Wagner’s Ring all over the world and in 2017 worked with my partners at Choose Chicago to prospect potential groups. International groups plan travel for large events like this at least 18 months before a performance, so when we went on sale with tickets in 2018 about a dozen operators ranging from Canada, New Zealand, the U.K., and Australia all reserved large group orders that totaled almost half a million dollars. The level of detail and customer service was absolutely key and to say it was a heartbreak to cancel this highly anticipated event is an understatement.

WHAT’S SOMETHING ABOUT YOUR WORK THAT PEOPLE MIGHT NOT KNOW?
West Side Story was a tremendous success for our company, and people may not realize that between myself and my coordinator at the time we sold and serviced 600 group leaders and almost 19,000 tickets over the course of the four-week run.

A FAVORITE LYRIC MOMENT?
Jesus Christ Superstar in 2018 was phenomenal. I loved seeing a diverse cast of young singers and dancers.

BEYOND OPERA, WHAT ARE YOUR OTHER PASSIONS?
Yoga, food, travel, and, most importantly, my family, especially my three kids who always keep me busy.
With the generous support of individuals and organizations, Lyric is leading the advancement of opera in America—continually advancing artistic excellence, increasing relevance and reach for both traditional and new audiences, engaging our diverse communities through signature learning and exploration initiatives, and expanding our role as a cultural cornerstone in Chicago. You are our partners in this important shared enterprise—and we sincerely thank you.

Lyric is one of the crown jewels of Chicago. Having a world-class opera

I enjoy being part of something that does that.
